LATEST INTELLIGENCE

By Telegraph to the New-York Daily Times.

Death of Abbott Lawrence.

BOSTON, Sunday, Aug. 19.

The Hon. ABBOTT LAWRENCE died at 11 o'clock this morning.

The merchants of this city will probably meet on Monday next, for the purpose of paying the customary marks of respect to the memory of the dead.

The time of burial has not been definitely fixed, but it will probably occur on Wednesday next. The interment will take place at Mount Auburn, in the lot where repose the remains of his children and of his brothers, WILLIAM and AMOS.

On the post mortem examination of the remains, it was found that not only the liver, but the stomach, intestines, and part of the intestines were greatly diseased. Dr. CHANNING, on the part of the attending surgeons, will prepare a statement in detail.

Mutiny on Ship-board—A Tuscaloosa Transported.

SAINT HOUX, Sunday, Aug. 19.

This morning, while the ship Ada Theaker, Capt. WYMAN, bound for Lisbon, was preparing to sail with a pilot on board, the crew attempted a mutiny, but were detected by the officers and all now in irons. Their reasons for mutinying are not known. The ship is at anchor in the lower bay, awaiting assistance from the revenue cutter Washington, which has been sent for and is momentarily expected.

The Cuba Trade telegraph wire sunk under the river at the Highlands and belonging to the New-York and Cuba Mail Steamship Company, was badly hooked and broken, and several hundred feet of it stolen a few nights since by some unknown scoundrels. Temporary repairs have been made, so that the line is now again in working order.

Yellow Fever in Virginia.

BALTIMORE, Saturday, Aug. 18.

The Boston mail is late as due is received.

The deaths from yellow fever at Portsmouth now average eight a day, in a population of 2,000 persons.

The accounts of the fever, from Norfolk, are very interesting. Three new cases were reported on Thursday. Capt. BARNEY's daughter is dead.

Contributions in aid of the sufferers are coming in from all quarters. The fund raised in this city now amounts to over $6,000.

BALTIMORE, Sunday, Aug. 19.

At Norfolk the fever is slightly abating, but at Portsmouth it is reported to be more violent than ever.

Yellow Fever at New-Orleans.

NEW-ORLEANS, Saturday, Aug. 18.

The fever here is then it about a stand. The deaths in the Hospital for the past week were 138, and the number of cases cured 132.

The Cotton Crop in Mississippi.

NEW-ORLEANS, Friday, Aug. 17.

A letter from Natchez, Miss., states that the Cotton crop was suffering from rot and rust in that region, and that the prospects are 15 to 20 per cent worse than they were two weeks ago.

Sentence of Death against a Murderer.

WATERTOWN, N. Y., Friday, Aug. 17.

MICHAEL CAVANAGH was yesterday convicted of Manslaughter of the murder of Mr. COOPER, at Lyons Falls, in May last. He was sentenced by Judge RUTGER to be hung on the 6th October.

Republican Meeting at Washington.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, Aug. 18.

Quite a large meeting, in the evening of the Republican Association last night, the officers were all elected. The names of its members have not yet been made public.

Meeting among the Philadelphia Firemen.

PHILADELPHIA, Sunday, Aug. 19.

A conspiracy was overheard here on Saturday night between the New-Market and Mount Vernon fire companies. Three of the rioters were shot, two of whom are not expected to live.

Mortality at Boston.

BOSTON, Saturday, Aug. 18.

The deaths in this city for the past week have been one hundred and nine, of which sixty-two were those of children under five years of age.

Alabama Election.

NEW-ORLEANS, Saturday, Aug. 18.

The majority for WINSTON, the Democratic candidate for Governor in Alabama, is about 11,000.

FROM KANSAS.

Proceedings of the Legislature.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

LYONS, Tuesday, Aug. 14, 1855.

Received this morning letters from Kansas. The Legislature is progressing with business. A multitude of local bills and acts of incorporation have been passed. Important measures have also been adopted. There is an act to regulate elections and provides, and a homestead bill by which 160 acres of land outside of town, and $1,200 worth of town lots, together with wearing apparel and implements, are protected from execution. This is a very important act, and in my opinion, a very excellent one. Some provision ought to be made for women and children. Another important measure is "An act to punish offences against slave property." It provides that raising an insurrection among slaves shall be punished with death; writing or speaking in such manner as to excite rebellion or insurrection of slaves is punished with death; destroying very slaves is punished with death, or life imprisonment, at the option of the Jury; and assisting to destroy slaves is punished with death, or not less than five years imprisonment at hard labor, as the Jury may determine.

Another important act is the bill to regulate elections. It provides that "any free white male citizen of the United States, and any free male Indian who is made a citizen by treaty or otherwise over the age of 21 years, who shall be an inhabitant of this Territory, and who shall have paid a territorial tax, shall be a qualified elector for all elective offices." One day's actual residence is sufficient. This confirms the contest between the people of Missouri and the old activities. When any vote is challenged the officers are required to administer an oath to the party proposing to vote to support the Constitution of the United States, the Kansas Nebraska Act and the Fugitive Slave law. This is a total exclusion of all who are opposed to the Territorial bill and the Fugitive Slave law—in other words of nearly all the Northern emigrants.

A joint resolution has been passed providing for the appointment of a Board of Commissioners "to consider with the Delaware tribe of Indians in Kansas, unassigned with their Agent, concerning a new treaty with them and their abolition to civilization." This is designed to put an end to the difficulties now existing by attempts to occupy the Delaware reservation. The state of feeling in the Territory remains just where it was. There is an impression that the difficulties between the Free-Soilers and Pro-Slavery parties, and this may continue until the Slavery party abandon the Union, with or without a Slave Constitution.

Yours, &c. L.

Commencement at Williams College.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

WILLIAMSTOWN, Wednesday, Aug. 15, 1855.

The efforts of competitors for the prize in declamation, delivered on Tuesday evening, were of very fair average merit. Three competitors are elected annually from each of the three lower classes.

Rev. H. W. BEECHER's address before the Adelphic Union, followed the declamation. An immense audience had assembled from many miles around, probably attracted by the fame of the orator, rather than by interest in the productions of the Undergraduates. The address having been already delivered at Harvard during the last commencement, would not be new to your readers. The subject was "Mirthfulness," and of course, there was no lack of mirth-exciting matter in the discourse.

Commencement Day dawned auspiciously, and everybody seemed in fine spirits. Here, Commencement is a Gala Day for the country round about, and the time when people of all sizes, sexes, and degrees of social position, turn out and parade the ordinarily quiet streets in their very best Sunday clothes.

At 9 o'clock a procession of Graduates and Undergraduates was formed, headed by the Corporation and Faculty, with DODWORTH's Band, fifteen performers. The exercises of the day were opened with prayer by the President. Then followed the final performances of the graduating class, interspersed with enlivening strains of music.

The Latin Salutatory was delivered by E. L. LINCOLN, of Plainfield, Mass. The Classical Oration by S. F. WOODS, Green River, N. Y.

"Earnest Men" was the title of the next oration, delivered by JOHN FOOT, Geneva, N. Y.

"True Progress" was truthfully and forcibly characterized by STEPHEN E. SEYMOUR, Granville.

Then followed "Luxury; its proper uses and limits," by H. J. ACKER, Catskill, N. Y.

"Mormonism" was denounced by D. DEWEY, of Williamstown.

"Resistance to Nature" was discoursed upon by EDWARD J. HOOKER, of South Hadley. "Resistance to Nature is an old sin, covering itself in a thousand forms. It raised its serpent head in Eden, and has been breeding its kind ever since. This parasite has been rooted in our mind till it has become a part of our very being. The Utilitarian, by his very name, acknowledges the sin. The rigid righteous publicly professes it as a virtue."

"Berkshire" received large encomium from C. E. FITCH, of Syracuse, N. Y.

"Bubbles" followed from ABRAHAM LANSING, Albany.

"True Religion essential to the Highest Civilization," by GEO. A. MILLER, Lyme, Conn.

"Our Filial Relation to England" was considered by PHINEAS W. HITCHCOCK, of New-Lebanon, N. Y. He brought to view in an earnest and forcible manner the ties which bind our interests inseparably to those of England, and forbid us to sympathize with Russia in the present struggle.

Our Country was then proved to be the Moulding Agent of the World, by DAVID C. SCUDDER, Boston.

"American Literature—Its characteristics and their causes," was a most able performance, by GEO. T. WASHBURN, of Lenox.

"Mummy Life," by J. J. INGALLS, of Haverhill, followed. The orator was particularly hard against "mummies" among students and professors. His thoughts were just, and expressed with much eloquence and humor.

H. W. SEYMOUR, of Brockport, N. Y., discoursed on "Work," W. A. LAURENCE, of Stanhope, N. J., on "Cosmopolitism."

The Philosophical Oration was an able effort. Subject, "Foot prints of the Creator," by JAMES ORTON, Lisle, N. Y.

The exercises of the afternoon were opened with an oration on the "Money King," by CYRUS A. GROW, of Coleraine. He did not consider riches the root of all evil.

The delights of the "Quiet Man" were eloquently portrayed by W. P. PRENTICE, of Albany.

"Scotland's Martyr Days" were the theme of T. M. NIVEN, Bloomingburg, N. Y.

WILLIAM R. DOWNES, of Plainfield, N. J., delivered himself of some very sensible ideas on the "Political Position of the American Pulpit."

The Metaphysical Oration was delivered by W. W. ADAMS, of Chicago, Ill. His subject was "Limitations and Certainty of Human Knowledge." He spoke of the sphere of human knowledge, and of its accuracy. The metaphysician's labors were often jeered at, but were really sublime and indispensable to a true manhood. The speaker showed a thorough mastery of his subject.

H. A. ESSON delivered at once a eulogy and a lament upon Forests. He deplored the vandal spirit of the age which destroys the ornaments of the Forest for mercenary purposes.

WALTER EDWARDS, Jr., of New-York City, endeavored to interest the audience in some commonplace remarks on the "Dungeons of the Revolution." The performance was up to the average of rural Fourth of July literature.

The most spicy and original speech of the day was then delivered by D. T. HOLMES, of Waukegan, Ill. He drew some graphic sketches of College characters, not only amusing but truthful. Smoke of every description were cut to the quick.

The Ethical Oration was given by S. B. FORNES, of Ashland. Assuming that man has a conscience, that it is impelling and retributive if not discriminative, the Speaker dwelt upon its Retributive Power, exhibiting its nature, and urging its necessity to man as a rational being.

B. Y. AVERILL, Chicago, Ill., delivered an able Oration on Originality of Thought, its Nature and Value.

W. R. DUNBOOK, of Boston, spoke of the importance of Esthetic culture in a course of education. His style of composition and delivery were generally admired.

The Master's orations were to be delivered by J. S. RATCHELDER, of Needham, and E. W. FRENCH, of Palmyra, N. Y. The first orator did not appear. We regret having been unable to hear the latter, as his effort was highly spoken of.

The Valedictory was then delivered in very creditable style, by CHARLES MARSH, of Spring field.

A number of the speakers appointed were excused from various causes.

Diplomas were then conferred upon fifty-one members of the graduating class, and 36 stepped with exultation into the place of '35, and the Freshmen rejoiced that their trials were over.

HARVEST REPORTS.

TEXAS.

CASS COUNTY, July 22.—Crops are generally good. Corn and wheat matured. Prospects good for an average crop of cotton. None of our past year's crops are shipped, or sold, nor can money be realized upon any kind of produce, owing to the want of navigation hence to New-Orleans.

INDIANA.

MIAMI COUNTY, Aug. 12.—As far as I have been able to learn, crops of all kinds are far more than an average in this and adjoining counties. The wheat is now taken care of, and it is safe to say, there is more than an average yield, of more than ordinarily good wheat; it has grown some in the shock, but not enough to injure it. Oats were never better. Grass unusually good. Potatoes very promising. Corn, with a favorable season, will at least be good. Very little barley or rye cultivated in this part of the State; not enough, at any rate, to give it any commercial importance whatever.

LOUISIANA.

SABINE COUNTY, July 25.—In this parish we only raise two articles that are deemed staple, viz.: corn and cotton.

The corn crop is the best we have had for ten years. Cotton, up to this time, is very promising, but may yet be cut off by worms or drouth.

ILLINOIS.

JO DAVIESS COUNTY, Aug. 10.—The wheat crop has turned out well, better than was expected. Other grains look well. Prospects favorable generally for farmers.

EFFINGHAM COUNTY, Aug. 12.—Our crops are fine. Wheat is made, oats and potatoes are nearly made, and one or two rains more will make corn. We have no fears of an over-crop. The chinck bug is doing injury to some extent in some places. On the whole prospects were never better.

WHITE COUNTY, Aug. 12.—We have an abundant yield of every description of produce this season, and unless farmers should meet with some unforeseen misfortune, times and money will be easy the coming Winter.

CLAY COUNTY, July 16.—Crops promise to be abundant throughout this entire section. The countenances of our farmers and merchants are lighting up, business is becoming active, and we will shortly recover our usual healthy condition in money matters.

NEW-YORK.

LIVINGSTON, COLUMBIA COUNTY, Aug. 17.—It is a common remark throughout this region, that there never has been a harvest so beautiful as the present. For some days anxiety was at its height, in relation to the rye crop, which is always a very important staple here, and much more than usual had been sown. Although this crop has suffered some injury, I think it is not depreciated five per cent. The growth of oats was so luxurient that they were badly lodged; but the farmers are well satisfied to take the extra time required to gather them. There is no potato rot reported here. It has been rather too wet for corn this season, but there will still be more than an average yield. Buckwheat looks well. Almost everything here is favorable to the prosperity of the farmer.

ANGELICA, ALLEGHANY COUNTY, Aug. 15.—This County is not a large grain growing one. Wheat is double the usual quantity. Oats, grass, potatoes and corn, all at present bid fair for a more than usual crop. There is every appearance of an abundant harvest. Farmers' faces, therefore, look bright and cheerful, and the merchants feel buoyant.

OPPENHEIM, FULTON COUNTY, Aug. 15.—More wheat was sown in this vicinity last Fall than for ten years previous; it looks excellent and is a fine crop. Oats are good. Grass is better than for years past. Corn is poor.

CHATAUGAY, FRANKLIN COUNTY, Aug. 15.—All kinds of grain promise an abundant harvest; nothing better for fifteen years past.

MICHIGAN.

BATTLE CREEK, CALHOUN COUNTY, July 24.—We are in the midst of harvest. The fly has injured wheat very much; it is estimated at about half a crop. The weather is very unfavorable just now. Wheat will soon grow, if there is not a change in the weather. All other crops bid fair to be abundant.

MICHIGAN.

INGHAM COUNTY, Aug. 15.—The yield of wheat in this region is greater than ever before; last Fall every farmer put in his last acre. Oats are a heavy yield. Potatoes and corn were put back by the cold of May and June, but are doing well now. We are troubled very little with poor money or broken banks here.

MISSISSIPPI.

HINDS, MADISON AND RANKIN COUNTIES, Aug. 10.—Up to 20th July this whole section suffered much from drouth, and great fears were entertained of the failure of our crops. Since then we have generally had good rains, and our corn and cotton greatly improved. The corn crop will probably be sufficient for the coming year. Cotton will be short, unless frost holds off very late.

Apples—Potatoes—Peaches—Tomatoes.

On Saturday evening, as usual, we strolled through the markets, partly to learn how fare the fruit, vegetable and root crops in this unnatural weather, and partly to amuse ourselves in seeing what was to set some six hundred thousand jawbones in motion at a Sunday dinner—we'll not be precise as to the number, till we learn whether the census men did their whole duty; and, besides, we do not know how many of the entire population do not chew their food for want of grinders lost or yet ungrown; nor can we estimate how many will be without a Sunday dinner, though in these potato times the latter number ought to be in the neighborhood of 0. But omitting our sage reflections upon the inaccuracy of census reports; upon the number of babes, old people, and imprudent middle-aged who are toothless; and upon the proportion of the dinnerless—all questions of interest no doubt—let us attend to the fruits and vegetables.

Apples ripe, half ripe and not ripe at all, small as chestnuts, and larger than two fists, August sweets and those bitter as persimmons or sour as oil of vitriol, those labelled for baking, for stewing, for pies and for eating, and those not worth a label—all these and more we found in great abundance, in carts, bags, baskets and barrels, for sale by the piece, pint, quart, half peck, peck, bushel, or cart-load; and at prices just one-half of those current Saturday week. We learn that this staple fruit is everywhere plentiful, and time to gather being given, they will come into market till we say enough.

Potatoes are as abundant as apples, only more so. The dreaded "rot" is fast extending over Long Island, and farmers are rushing them into market as fast as possible, to get them out of harm's way. On some days last week dozens of loads came up to York and went back again—for want of buyers. Just now Potty is in clover. The Maine Law is of no account, for the best luxury of whisky is plenty. Just though reports from Long Island are bad, other Hillsand in query we heard of only slight appearances of the rotting there. New-Jersey potatoes are large, of good quality, and turn out almost a "peck to the hill." From the large surface planted, and the forwardness of the crop, the prospect is that there will be no skin of potatoes at low prices, let the rot do its worst. If speculators will buy up the crop in advance, at 62½ cents and 75 cents per bushel, as report says they are doing, let them have them, provided they will "bind the bargain" with a fair consideration in cash down.

Peaches, peaches were—well we did not find any. We saw any quantity of baskets full of what went by the name of peaches, but they did not look like peaches, did not taste like them. The fact is, this year, so far, "peaches is (not) peaches," and from what we see and hear they will not be. These small, round, stone hard or else rotten, sour things, sold as peaches, have yet none of the genuine flavor which lingering memory or longing anticipation tell us of. Delaware, little in territory but formerly great in the peach line, is losing her sweet fame. Texas, she has "made an effort" this year, but all the fruit she has yet seen us is not worth mentioning, except for the price it brings—ten to fifteen shillings a basket, and small baskets at that. And New-Jersey "nectarines" and "Morris whites" are literally nowhere, we fear. There are in market thousands and tens of thousands of baskets of New-Jersey "slingstones," at one, to five shillings the basket, which is ten, to two shillings more than they are worth to the consumer, since from their value must be deducted first cost, paregoric and other colic and cholera medicines, with physicians' prescriptions, to say nothing of expenses for shrouds, coffins and graves for those eating them too lavishly.

Tomatoes are better, more abundant, and cheaper than we remember to have seen them before at this season. Great baskets of very fine "love apples"—as our first crop was called—are offered at 37½ cents, 25 cents, 18¾ cents, and so downward to your own figure, if you will only empty the baskets that the owner may carry them home to put peaches in.

Nearly all kinds of vegetables were never so abundant, and at prices just high enough to pay for bringing them to market and yield the producer a return equivalent to that of ordinary years, when high prices were obtained for the lesser quantity grown upon the same surface.

Amusements.

The event of the week will be the reception of M'lle RACHEL, who is expected to arrive here on Wednesday next. A steamboat excursion down the Bay to meet the Pacific, is arranged. It will start from Whitehall on Wednesday morning at 9 o'clock, and cruise pleasantly about the Hook until the steamer gets in sight. There the passengers will exult and shout furious cheers of welcome.

AT NIBLO'S the Pyne and Harrison Opera Troupe will repeat their performance of "Cinderella." Mr. BURTON plays on Tuesday and Thursday evenings, the latter being for his benefit, and the last night of his appearance up town.

Mr. HACKETT appears to-night at the Metropolitan Theatre, in his admirable character of Falstaff. Mr. HACKETT has been induced by a number of admirers to perform a round of his most famous characters previous to his departure for Europe. Thousands of our theatre goers will be delighted at the news.

At the Broadway the GARDINI RAVEL troupe are doing an immense business. They bring out a new piece to-night in four tableaux called "Satanita."

At the Chinese Room, SMITH's Tour of Europe is still the unfailing attraction.

CHRISTY & WOOD's Minstrels, at No. 472 Broadway, have an excellent programme to-night.

Miss FANNY OSBORN, of Wallack's Theatre, died of consumption on Friday last. The contemplated benefit to which we directed attention in Saturday's paper, did not, in consequence, come off.

The Academy of Music will open about the 15th September; Wallack's Theatre on the 10th; and Burton's, about the same time.

Musical and Dramatic Items.

The four farewell performances of Mlle. RACHEL in London have created a furore. The London Times has the following on the subject:

No one would have imagined from the crowded state of St. James' Theatre last night that we had reached the end of July, and that all London was, consequently, going "out of town." The presence of the great tragedienne, Mlle. RACHEL, on the boards where she had so often delighted the English public, seemed to set aside all notion of carry or late as to season, and such was the throng, in pit, boxes, and gallery that one was tempted to fancy that the train of loaded cabs that had passed through the streets during the whole of the morning was rather some optical delusion than a series of vehicles actually diminishing the population of the metropolis. There is no doubt that the higher class of London playgoers heartily rejoices that Mlle. RACHEL, on her way to a remote country, where she will make the bold experiment whether Cousin Jonathan will relish an unmusical drama, not acted in his own language, has remembered that London lies on the route from Paris to Liverpool, and has resolved to favor her old admirers with a series of four performances. Thanks to her genius, "Les Horaces," "Phèdre," and "Andromaque," only celebrated here for more than two generations from the time that every educated Englishman was supposed to know them by name, and equally expected to have abstained from their perusal, are now as much the property of London as of Paris. A century ago, in the days of the "Distressed Mother," the case was different. We need not now especially analyze Mademoiselle RACHEL's interpretation of Camille in "Les Horaces," for it is the character which, though it does not begin to develop itself till the play approaches its termination, is more than any other identified in the English memory with the image of the transcendent actress. Who is not familiar with the eloquent by-play which accompanies the narrative of her lover's death, and is abruptly broken off by the fall into the chair, so startling in its effect, so classical in the pose which it produces? Who has forgotten the long soliloquy in which Camille accurately runs over the long chain of her vicissitudes, and as changes her voice as she reaches the several stages of hope and disappointment that each time which, at her dictation, be distinguished with the name of some distinct passion. Who, above all, has ever dismissed from his mind for any length of time the wonderful attack upon the vindictive brother, the curse on Rome, and the change of the ideal being into a very termagant, but a terrible, magnificent, the most appalling kind, whose rage assumes the appearance of prophecy? We have only to say that all these fine imaginings were last night exhibited by Mademoiselle RACHEL in all their force, and raised the same moment of astonishment as ever. At the hands of painting there was the appalling character, for the most subtle touches there was the low, suppressed murmur, which is, perhaps, even more indicative of intellectual gratification. Every manifestation was made that could satisfy the feelings of an artist. The tragedy was preceded by a new comedy from the pen of M. EMILE PREHARAY, which is entitled "La Fausse de Phèdre," but which is intended to prove that the authority of a literature over his own language is a very doubtful sort of affair. It shows three members of Mademoiselle RACHEL's family all at once, namely, the sentimental and sentimental Mademoiselle SARAH FELIX, as one of Molière's "Jeunes Veuves," who successfully manage the affairs of their female friends in so many French plays; the more sentimental Mademoiselle LIA FELIX (who is "the very image" of her sister) as one of those wives, also familiar, who just don't go wrong; and Mademoiselle DINAH FELIX as a very smart little ingénuité. What other media of resources we do not detect, for the actions and dialogue are extravagant, and the result is dull.

ARRESTED ON THE STAGE.—The rehearsal of the Lowell Museum was suddenly interrupted on Monday forenoon by the appearance upon the stage of Chief of Police CHARNOCK. HARRIS F. CRAGIN, of Lowell, and a woman named EMMA BRADSTREET, to whom CRAGIN was married in Manchester on the 4th of July last, were arrested while rehearsing. CRAGIN charged with adultery, having been previously married to Miss OWEN, of Boston. His first wife was divorced from him at the last session of the Supreme Court, but this did not, in the letter of the law, give him liberty to marry again.

Miss ELOISE BRIDGE, the young and popular actress, is on her way to St. Louis, where she is to play an engagement. She will also appear in Louisville, Indianapolis, Pittsburg and Columbus, where she opens for new theatre. Miss BRIDGE is winning an enviable reputation in the West. We are informed that she is to play at Buffalo on the 20th of October.

Mr. and Mrs. EDDY are engaged for the Metropolitan Theatre, Buffalo, and will appear there shortly.

Mr. JAMES BENNETT has been playing at the Theatre Royal, Montreal. He took a benefit on Friday, playing "Hamlet."

FRANCOIS RAVEL and troupe are still drawing large houses at Walnut-street Theatre, Philadelphia.

Mr. JOHN ELLERS, the lessee of the Cleveland Theatre, had his benefit on Saturday last, the last night of the season.

Mrs. CHAS. HOWARD's engagement at the Holliday-street Theatre, Baltimore, terminated on Saturday.

Mr. JOHN BROUGHAM is playing at the Chicago theatre.

Mr. DAVENPORT and Miss VIRNIE were at the Albany Theatre last week, drawing good houses.

Mr. J. D. GRACE and Mrs. COLEMAN PEPS have been playing at Columbus, Ohio.

Military Encampment at Kingston.

The encampment of the Second Division, New-York State Militia, under the command of Major-General AARON WARD, commences at Kingston this day, and will continue until Saturday. The Division consists of the 5th Brigade, under the command of General DURYEA, the 7th Brigade under the command of General SCHUCHAM, and the 8th Brigade under the command of General SAMPSON. It is supposed that at least 3,500 men will be under arms, beside such troops as may be present as invited guests.

The first day will be devoted mostly to the arrangement of the camp. On Tuesday Governor CLARK, the Commander-in-Chief, and his Staff, will visit the encampment.

On Wednesday, at such hour as his Excellency may direct, there will be a Grand Review of the entire division, at which it is understood that Lieutenant-General WINFIELD SCOTT will be present as the guest of Major-General WARD. This is the first occasion on which the old veteran has appeared in public since his promotion.

On Tuesday evening there is to be a ball in the grand tent, given by the officers of the division.

The celebrated Burgess Corps of the city of Albany have tendered their services and been accepted as a guard of honor to his Excellency, Governor CLARK.

This is the first encampment on so large a scale that has been ordered under the new law, and every effort will be made to give it a successful result.

We copy the "Duties of the Camp," as given in General Orders:

DUTIES OF THE CAMP.

There shall be five daily roll calls during the encampment. The first immediately after reveille; the second at the morning dress parade; the third immediately before dinner; the fourth at the evening parade or retreat, and the fifth immediately after tattoo. The first, third and fifth will be made on the Company parade; the second at the morning dress-parade, and the fourth at the retreat or evening dress parade. The result of each—excepting those made at the evening and morning parades—will be immediately and promptly reported by the first Sergeant to the Captain, and by the latter, in case of absence without leave, to the Adjutant, for the information of the Colonel. And the result of the first will constitute the foundation of the written morning report of Companies to be handed in to the Adjutant before 8 o'clock A. M., verified by the signature of the first Sergeant and Captain. Immediately thereafter the Adjutant will deliver all the morning reports for the Regiment to the Brigade Major, to be embodied in one report for the Brigade, and to be delivered by him to the Division Inspector by 10 o'clock A. M., at which time the Division Inspector will furnish copies of all division orders for the day, to be read at the morning or evening parades of the several regiments.

At dawn of day a signal or call will be made for the music to repair to their respective regimental parades, and at five minutes after the call, the whole will commence the reveille, when both officers and men will rise. As soon as the music ceases, the First Sergeant will call the roll in front of the tents—each company being in the habitual order of formation—and so soon as the tents are in order, the horses watered and fed, the Captain or officer in command will instruct their several companies in the school of the soldier and company until half-after 6 o'clock A. M.

At 7 o'clock A. M. the signal for breakfast, or "Peas upon a Trencher," will be sounded.

At 8½ o'clock A. M., a signal will be made for the details of the guard to turn out on their company parades, and at ten minutes after that a second call will be sounded, when the details will be conducted first to the respective regimental parades, and thence to the general parades. Each detachment upon reaching the parade will take post on the left of the one preceding it; the Adjutant of the day will accompany the detail from the regiment to which he is attached with the band of the regiment.

At 9 o'clock the troops will be here and the guard turned off under the direction of the officer of the day, assisted by a division staff officer and Adjutant of the day, the parade to be conducted in compliance with the army regulations in every respect.

At 9½ o'clock a signal will be sounded for the troop or regimental morning dress-parade, when the music will assemble on the parade, at which time each company will turn out under arms for inspection by its officers. At 10 minutes after that signal, the Adjutant's call will be given by the mounted musicians, on which each company will be marched to the regiment parade and formed into their respective positions; the field and staff officers will repair at the same time to their respective positions, and the parade will be conducted in every particular in conformity to the Army regulations. Immediately after which the officer in command will instruct their respective Regiments in the School of the Battalion—that is to say: first, in the manner of opening ranks and executing the different fringe; secondly, in the different methods of passing from line into column; thirdly, the march in column, and the various other movements in relation to the column; fourthly, the different methods of passing from column into line; and fifthly, the march in line, to front and rear; the wave by a flank, forming by file into line; the passage of defile in retiring; the passage of lines; the change of front; the column of attack; the disposition against cavalry and rallying.

At 40 minutes before 12 o'clock A. M., a signal will be sounded by a trumpet for the Light Artillery and Cavalry mounting, dismounting and dismounting horses.

At 1 o'clock P. M., the signal for dinner, "Roast Beef" will be sounded or beat, at which time the third Company roll will be called.

At 3½ o'clock P. M., the same order will be made for the Regiments to parade at troop beating, and the parade will be formed in the same manner; immediately after which the Brigade drills will be opened, and the Brigadier General, or officer in command, will instruct the Brigade in the evolutions of the line, from that time until 5 o'clock P. M., excepting on days when a Division drill is ordered to be performed.

At 6½ o'clock a signal will be given for the retreat, or regimental evening dress-parade, when the music will assemble on the parade for the evening parade, and at 10 minutes after that signal the Adjutant's call will be given by the mounted musicians, when the parade will be formed and conducted as at the morning parade.

At 9 o'clock P. M., the signal for tattoo will be sounded, when the music will again assemble on the regimental parade, and tattoo will be beaten, and the roll call will be called, and the order of Major General.

DEATH OF ABBOTT LAWRENCE.

BRIEF MEMOIR OF HIS LIFE AND PUBLIC SERVICES.

Historical Notice of the Lawrence Family.

Hon. ABBOTT LAWRENCE died at his residence in Boston, on Saturday morning, at 11 o'clock.

Mr. LAWRENCE has long been known throughout the United States, as a public spirited citizen of distinguished merit; as a gentleman of dignified bearing, great energy of character, lofty sympathies and distinguished generosity. It may not be amiss, owing to present an outline of his life, as well as to glance at the origin of a family, which has for ever ranked Boston with those men of large, wealth, who have given weight to its commercial importance, and whose lives have contributed the entire possibility of frequenting the good of mankind, being conspicuous in mind by the possession of great gifts. The three brothers, WILLIAM, AMOS and ABBOTT, from a humble origin, by their industry, at once our admiration and respect, and, though very poor, have not forgotten the claims of charity, nor the duty of aiding in the enlightenment of their fellow-men. It is well known that the LAWRENCE family is one of the most ancient in the Commonwealth, and one of the oldest in the history of Watertown, as early as the year 1635; the first of the name came from England with Governor WINTHROP, in 1630. With his family he moved to Groton, as an early member of its settlement, for on the 19th of April, 1655, he took the Freeman's oath. His name was JOHN LAWRENCE, and his wife ELIZABETH, and they had eleven children, and among them, SAMUEL, the father of ABBOTT, who descended. They were among the early pioneers, whose frugal habits and energy contributed materially to form the men of the 18th century. Mr. SAMUEL LAWRENCE was an officer in the colonial army, and at Bunker Hill commanded a regiment through his bravery. Subsequently in Rhode Island he served as Adjutant-General under SULLIVAN, and only remained the service when his country required his services no longer. Of the particulars of his military service, it is recorded that on the 23d of July, 1776, he obtained a furlough, and returned to Groton to fulfill his contract of marriage with ELIZABETH KEMP, with whom he had been previously betrothed in childhood, and who had been his promised wife. Though the cessation of war, and his consequent absence from home, prevented him from carrying out his intention, it was the opinion of his biographer, that SUSANNA had better be Elizabeth's sister than his future consort. With this intent he obtained a leave of absence, and while the marriage was proceeding, the alarm bell rang and the men and soldiers to their posts at Ticonderoga, where the consummation of Burgoyne's defeat followed, and the customary festivities were delayed in the young married people's behalf. Instead of country, and acknowledgment the sacrifice of struggling nation upon his individual account, and a hearty farewell of his bride, and boarded in Charlestown bridge. Such a man was sunday as to the importance of such men, and some noble instances of reflected credit upon their parent. When the news of this marriage became known to his Colonel, he granted him another furlough, after which he joined the army, as we have stated, in Rhode Island. Upon his return, he resigned the highest honors of the town. He was a friend to education, and was one of the most generous in founding the Seminary at Groton, of which he was a trustee for thirty-three years, and the title of which, in 1842, was changed from "Groton" to the "Lawrence Academy," as a memorial of his generosity. His father and his two sons, WILLIAM and AMOS, were interested in the academy, and contributed to its support. The eldest, WILLIAM, died at the age of 21 years, and AMOS, the second, died in 1848, and in January, 1852, the parent, Mr. SAMUEL LAWRENCE, the youngest of the family, was born; WILLIAM and AMOS were respectively the sixteen of ABBOTT, and their ancestors of earth closed in 1848 and 1852.

AMOS was the first to leave the paternal roof to seek a wider field of enterprise in Boston, and having served an apprenticeship in the "country store" at Groton, he soon found employment, and in a few months commenced business on his own account. His prosperity was in proportion to his deserts, and to that honesty which was his characteristic during a long life of successful prosperity. He was indebted for early success. Having become fairly established, he sent for his brother ABBOTT, then a lad of fifteen, and on the 6th of October, 1800, the latter entered his operations. Of his entry into the world, Mr. AMOS LAWRENCE in his diary remarks: "In 1806 he came to me as my apprentice, bringing his bundle under his arm, with less than three dollars in his pocket (and this was his fortune;) a first rate business led by my side, the other bright lads, needed the counsel and assistance to guard him from the perils that surrounded exposed to." The care of an elder brother and the own good sense guided the young adventurer free from those vices incidental to a city life, and on the first of January, 1814, the two brothers associated themselves in business under the title of A. & A. LAWRENCE. Mr. AMOS LAWRENCE gave fifty thousand dollars as capital, the remainder of the partnership commenced when the "Embargo news" came, by which the high price of cotton was knocked down. ABBOTT, observed at the gloomy prospects, was about abandoning the business, but the counsels of AMOS prevented his consummation of this intention. It was during this year that the military companies of Boston were called upon to do active duty, and contributed to the same spirit which induced the brothers to make sacrifices for the country's good. ABBOTT became a member of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Guards, and when that corps marched to the head to assist in the relief of that town from the dread invasion, the young merchant was among the first to repair to the rendezvous. At Fort Independence and subsequently when the Guards were stationed at the Charlestown Navy-Yard, he was a valuable and efficient soldier in the ranks. GEORGE BOND, Esq., the second commander of this corps, at a dinner given a few years since by the past and present members of the Ancient and Honorable Guards, stated in the company that he was peculiarly struck with the manners of young LAWRENCE and with the conversation with him, and he thought there was something in him which would make a man of consequence. He so told young LAWRENCE, and advised him to devote two hours to study and the cultivation of the mind, and he would be for him high honors if he were true to himself. Mr. LAWRENCE, who was present, confessed the compliment, and assured Mr. BOND that he had been paying over given him, and that he should act upon it, and his success in life and his elevation, advanced by Mr. BOND, and Mr. LAW

[illegible] by the able manner which you have fulfilled your mission, done honor to the profession as a merchant, and to our good city of Boston."

The reply of Mr. LAWRENCE on this occasion, exhibited his respect for the dead, and his gratitude for the compliment intended, was as follows:

BOSTON, Nov. 6, 1853.

MY DEAR SIR:—Upon my arrival in Boston last week, I had the honor to receive your communication of the 10th ult., inviting me to meet my fellow citizens at a public dinner, or in such other mode as I might prefer.

I am deeply grateful for the honor you propose to confer upon me, and I cannot adequately express my sense of the value which I place upon the approval by my fellow citizens, of the manner in which I have discharged the duties of my diplomatic mission.

That approval itself amply compensates me for the labors and zeal with which I claim to have represented the Republic at the Court to which I was accredited. I am gratified also that you recognize the earnestness of my endeavors to cultivate feelings of special regard between the people of the United States, and the government and people of the United Kingdom, for these I deem among the most important incidental duties of my high office.

I have mingled freely with various classes of people in Great Britain and Ireland, and have uniformly been treated with the utmost considerate kindness. While, however cherishing sentiments of friendship and mutual good will, with a kindred race, I have constantly sought to maintain the honor and promote the best interest of our own country; and gives the highest gratification to believe that on no former period have our international relations with the parent country been in a more satisfactory condition than at the present time.

Although under ordinary circumstances, it would give me great pleasure to accept your invitation, yet I deem it my duty to decline it, in consequence of the melancholy fear so recently sustained by our city and our common country. A few days subsequent to the date of your letter, the United States were deprived by death of their greatest statesman; and the insignia of mourning which meet our eyes in every direction, justly attest the deep sorrow which pervades all classes of our people, for the national bereavement.

At such a season of general grief, I should appear to be wanting in respect for the dead, and consideration for the living, were I to accept a festive entertainment, as a testimonial of the services of which you are pleased to speak so kindly.

In the belief that the feelings which have prompted my decision will find a full response in your own and the hearts of those whom you represent, I have the honor to be, with sentiments of very great respect, your obliged friend and obedient servant, ABBOTT LAWRENCE.

Messrs. Nathan Appleton, Robert G. Shaw, F. Skinner, L. W. Tappan, William Sturgiss, George Baty Blake, Wm. Appleton, Francis Lowell, L. W. Paine, S. Hooper.

Since the return of Mr. LAWRENCE from England, he has resided in the bosom of his family, engaged in the peaceful pursuits of business, until the hand of disease was laid upon him and hurried him to the grave. He was cut off almost ere the vigor of manhood had begun to wane, being at the time of his death but sixty-three years of age. His death has left a void in the circle of the active, enterprising and energetic business men of Boston which cannot be filled. It is a loss to the community as well as to his family and immediate friends which will long be mourned.

SYDNEY SMITH'S LIFE AND LETTERS.

These are the most entertaining volumes we have perused for a long time. SYDNEY SMITH had a world-wide reputation, on account of his contributions to the Edinburg Review, which he founded—on account of his "Letters of Peter Plymley," in favor of Catholic Emancipation—on account of his reputation as a good conversationalist and joker, and on account of his denunciations of the "drab colored men of Pennsylvania." By the way, very little is said by his biographer of his far-famed letters on the Pennsylvania bonds. In truth, the least said the soonest mended. SYDNEY SMITH complained so loudly that half the world believed him utterly ruined by his American speculation. But the whole investment was only one poor thousand pounds, and he sold out for six hundred and sixty. Had he waited, principal and interest would have been duly paid him. The fact is, SYDNEY SMITH, as Canon of St. Paul's in London, and Rector of Combe Florey in Somersetshire, was receiving nearly £5,000 a year from the Church, (no wonder that he wrote letters and pamphlets against ecclesiastical reform!) and also was master of some £35,000 hard cash, which had fallen into his purse by the death of his wealthy brother in India. (When SYDNEY SMITH died, legacy duty was paid by his family upon £70,000, which he had bequeathed among them.) In England, he could safely invest his capital for no more than three and a half or four per cent. per annum. So he put some of it into the French funds at five per cent., some into Dutch bonds, which yielded a trifle more, and one thousand pounds into Pennsylvanian bonds, from which he expected eight to ten per cent. The payment of this interest was suspended for a time, and SYDNEY SMITH took out its value in abuse. His daughter omits one anecdote, which is too good to be spared. As we have heard it, the story runs thus: One of SYDNEY's friends, seeing the first of the "drab colored" epistles, and believing that his whole fortune had probably been swamped, called to see him, with looks and language of sympathy, and the intention of giving him pecuniary aid, if needed. SYDNEY listened to him, and gravely replied that he was not quite ruined. "Truly," said the reverend buffo, "I can say unto you, in the words of St. Paul, 'I wish that thou were even as I am, in all'—holding up the Pennsylvanian documents—'in all, save these bonds.'"

It was the fashion to speak of SYDNEY SMITH as a man kept in the background of his profession, in consequence of his liberal opinions. Let us see whether there was any ground for the belief. For it seems that SYDNEY SMITH, all things considered, had a very easy time of it in this earthly sphere. He was born in 1771, and his father, who was a wealthy man, gave him a first-rate education at Winchester School, where his scholarly attainments passed him into New College, Oxford, as a scholar, and soon after, as a Fellow—having free quarters at the University in both cases. The Fellowship (which he retained until his marriage) brought him in a clear £100 a year. He became a clergyman, and had about as much more as curate, "in a small village in the midst of Salisbury Plain," where he was at scarcely any expense, and had ample leisure for study. This was over fifty years ago, but then, as now, a bachelor curate was not to be pitied who could thus start with a thousand dollars a year,—and this was SYDNEY SMITH's lucky situation. The Squire of the parish made his acquaintance, and engaged him as tutor to his eldest son, whereupon SYDNEY gave up the curacy, set forth for Germany with his pupil, and "in stress of politics," put into Edinburg in 1797, and there remained five years—receiving £400 a year from the Squire all the time, in addition to the £100 from his Oxford Fellowship.

SYDNEY SMITH was 26 years old when he reached Edinburg, and, with a clear and easily earned income of £500 a year, (as much there as £1000 in London,) was exceedingly well off. He made acquaintance with JEFFREY, BROUGHAM, SCOTT, HORNER, PLAYFAIR and other stars and rising young men, and lived jovially enough with them—[illegible] clever and agreeable companion. [illegible] TALLEYRAND, (the wily politician, about £3,000,) which was wasted on himself, and the interest of his capital in £1000 a year, so that he did not lose by forfeiting his Fellowship. Mrs. SMITH also had a handsome pearl necklace, which she sold for £500, and they had this to start with, and, soon after, SYDNEY invested £1,000, which the Squire had presented him with.

Having very little to do, he proposed to start a Review, which was done—BROUGHAM, JEFFREY and HORNER being his assistants; he edited it for a year, and wrote for it for a quarter of a century, adding from £100 to £200 per annum to his income by the operation.

During the two last years of his residence at Edinburg, he had two pupils—each at £400 a year, and on their leaving him, in 1803, he went to try his fortune in London. His income, without any extraneous aid, was over £900 a year from his wife's fortune and his own investment, besides what the Edinburg Review brought him. Who will say that he was badly off? Just then, as if to help him, his wife's mother bequeathed her some jewels, which they sold for £1,200.

In London he formed a large circle of friends—chiefly lawyers, some of whom afterwards became eminent as judges and statesmen. He was appointed preacher to the Foundling Hospital, the salary of which is only £50 a year, for a weekly sermon, but the situation has usually led to church preferment. At this time, and for several years after, he was also allowed £100 a year by his elder brother, and he was also paid £150 a year as morning preacher at Berkely Chapel. Thus, in London, his income was nearer £600 than £500 a year. Such poverty, half the English clergymen of the present day would consider wealth. To make both ends meet, SYDNEY SMITH next gave a set of lectures at the Royal Institution, on Moral Philosophy, (on which he seems to have been very superficially informed;) they hit the popular taste,—the lecturer became popular, and during the two following years when he repeated them, "he was allowed to name his own terms," and with part of the proceeds furnished a house in Orchard-street. He now had close on to £1,000 a year, but (his daughter says,) "he still remained poor." The fact was he had taken to dinner giving, and that was particularly expensive in London, at that time, when it was the fashion to drink a great quantity of wine. His weekly "little suppers," to which "about twenty or thirty persons used to come as they pleased," must have been somewhat of a pull upon the lively parson's purse. Attendance at the "very agreeable dining-club, calling itself by the modest title of King of Clubs," was not wholly inexpensive. SYDNEY SMITH enjoyed company, and that enjoyment costs money.

He had got acquainted with Lords HOLLAND and GREY, and in 1806, when, by the death of PITT, the Whigs came into office, these noble friends gave ERSKINE, the new Chancellor, no rest until until he had appointed him to the rectory of Foston-le-Clay, in Yorkshire. As the income was over £800, here he was permanently provided for at the age of 35. He went down to be formally inducted into his benefice, but continued his residence in London until 1809, when an act of Parliament was passed, (and much complained of by free and easy clergymen like SYDNEY SMITH,) compelling incumbents to reside in their parishes. With much grumbling, therefore, SYDNEY SMITH went to live on his Yorkshire living, and had to borrow £500 from his brother to cover the expenses of his removal.

At Foston-le-Clay, where, there had not been a resident clergyman for 150 years, there were only the remains of a parsonage house. SMITH had to build one, and did—a strange structure, by all accounts, but convenient. He had 300 acres of glebe land, and turned farmer to cultivate them. The house-building drew considerably on his resources for some years, but a legacy of £2,000 from a rich aunt set that right. For the twenty-three years during which he held the Yorkshire living, SYDNEY SMITH's annual income was at least £1,100—yet he economized so badly that he had to take £100 a year from his elder brother to educate his son. In January, 1828, his personal friend and political opponent, Lord LYNDHURST, exercised his patronage as Chancellor, and made SYDNEY SMITH one of the Canons of Bristol Cathedral, and gave him the beautiful living of Combe Florey in exchange for that which he held in Yorkshire. Here, at the age of 57, the rotund and jocose prebend had a net income of £3,000 a year, and his days, like those of Thalaba, passed happily by, clouded only by an occasional discontent at his Whig friends, again in office from 1830 to 1841, not having raised him to a Bishopric. In 1831, however, he was made a prebend of St. Paul's, in London, also getting an additional rectory in Devonshire—raising his income to about £5,000 a year—and, some years later, obtained about £35,000 by the death of a brother who had made a large fortune in India.

In his political opinions SYDNEY SMITH was independent and liberal; in his public maintenance of them he was bold and able. Had he devoted his talents to the support of the Tory Governments of his time, no doubt he would have been a Bishop by the time he was fifty. He stuck to the cause of Truth, and died without a mitre. But he lived a very happy life, with good temper, a natural taste for enjoying himself, and a genial delight in that domesticity which, it seems to us, an English clergyman has simplest means of realizing. His biography, commenced by his widow and completed by his daughter, is a charming work, well deserving the remarkable popularity it has obtained in England. His letters are also admirable—though WM. AUSTIN, who has separately edited them, has jumbled them together very carelessly. The quotable bits of the Memoir have been so generally drawn upon that we shall confine our extracts to his correspondence.

Scotch Philosophers, 1801:

"When I object to Scotch philosophers in general is, that they reason upon man as they would upon a divinity; they pursue truth, without caring if it be useful truth. They are more fond of disputing on mind and matter than on any thing which can have reference to the real world, inhabited by real men, women, and children: a philosopher that descends to the present state of things I debased in their estimation."

Female Physiognomy:

"She is, for a woman, well-informed and very liberal; neither is she at all disagreeable; but the information of very plain women is so inconsiderable, that I agree with you in setting no great store by it. I am no great physiognomist, nor have I much confidence in a science which pretends to discover the inside from the out; but where I have seen fine eyes, a beautiful complexion, grace and symmetry, in women, I have generally thought them, amazingly well-informed and extremely philosophical. In contrary instances, seldom or ever. Is there any connecting fact in this?"

NAPOLEON in 1802:

"All these events in Germany have not astonished me: I allowed BONAPARTE twenty-eight years to launch forth another eleven super eyes (as the vulgar have it) to conclude peace, make a speech to the Senate and illuminate Paris. He is as rapid and as terrible as the lightning of God; would he were as transient!"

Opinion of the sex:

"I hardly know any man who deserves my esteem; therefore I shall think ——— unequally married if she married ———. It is a common, every-day sort of match; and she will be accounted, as usual, by the rapid accountants of Time, Peter, Harry, Susan, Daniel, Caroline, Elizabeth, Jemima, Decahedrons and Tridecahedrons."

How to farm well:

"I have been talking up against agricultural education and improvement so well when I am counselled to do; but I believe the first recipe to farm well is to be rich."

SYDNEY'S Jumbo:

"If the least man and the poorest man were enough of all SCOTT's people, I say there are many more powerful. The subject, the scenes, passes and pictures is half the battle. The representation of our ancient manners is a fortunate one and ample enough for three or four more novels."

America in 1818:

"There is nothing so curious and interesting as the rapidity with which the Americans are separating themselves over that immense continent. It is quite contrary to all probability that America should remain in an integral state. They aim at extending from sea to sea, and have already made settlements on the Pacific. There can be no community of interest between people placed under such very different circumstances. The maritime Americans, and those who communicate with Europe by the Mississippi, are, at this moment, as far as interest can divide men, two separate people. There does not appear to be in America at this moment one man of any considerable talents. They are a very sensible people, and seem to have conducted their affairs, upon the whole, very well. Their economy and their cheap Government will do some good in this country, by way of example. Their allowance to MUNROE is £5,000 per annum, and he finds his own victuals, fire, and candles!"

Sorrows of a wit:

"No pecuniary embarrassments equal to the embarrassments of a perfected wit, like Mr. ———; an eternal demand upon him for pleasantry, and a consciousness, on his part, of a limited income of the facetious; the disappointment of his creditors, the importunity of duns, the tricks, forgeries and false bills he is forced to pay in exchange for gold!"

A matter-of-fact traveling companion:

"I set off at 9 o'clock on Tuesday in the diligence, with a French lady and her father, who has an estate near Calais. I found him a sensible man, with that propensity which the French have for explaining things which do not require explanation. He explained to me, for instance, what he did when he found coffee too strong; he put water in it! He explained how blind people found their way in Paris—by tapping upon the wall with a stick; what he principally endeavored to make clear to me was, how they knew when they were coming to a crossing—it was when there was no longer a wall to strike against with their stick! I expressed my thorough comprehension of these means used by blind men, and he paid me many compliments upon my quickness."

MACKINTOSH'S style:

"It struck me last night, as I was lying in bed, that MACKINTOSH, if he were to write on pepper, would thus describe it: Pepper may philosophically be described as a dusty, and highly pulverized seed of an Oriental fruit; an article rather of condiment than diet, which, dispensed lightly over the surface of food with no other rule than the caprice of the consumer, communicates pleasure, rather than affords nutrition; and, by adding a tropical flavor to the grass and succulent viands of the North, approximates the different regions of the earth, explains the objects of commerce, and justifies the industry of man."

Benefits of Abstinence:

"Let me state some of the goods arising from abstaining from all fermented liquor. First, sweet sleep; having never known what sweet sleep was, I sleep like a baby or a plowboy. If I wake, no needless terrors, no black visions of life, but pleasing hopes and pleasing recollections: Holland House, past and to come! If I dream, it is not of lions and tigers, but of Easter dues and tithes. Secondly, I can take longer walks, and make greater exertions, without fatigue. My understanding is improved, and I comprehend Political Economy. I see better without wine and spectacles than when I used both. Only one evil ensues from it: I am so much extravagant spirits that I must lose blood, or look out for some one who will bore and depress me. Pray leave off wine: the stomach quite at rest; no heartburn, no pain, no distension."

An airy epigram:

"I send Mrs. MURRAY my epigram on Professor AIRY, of Cambridge, the great astronomer and mathematician, and his beautiful wife:

Airy alone has gained the double prize
Which fired mysterious to divide the crown:
His works have raised a mortal to the skies,
His marriage vows have drawn an angel down."

A poco-curante Premier:

"Lord MELBOURNE always thinks that man best qualified for any office of whom he has seen and knows the least."

DANIEL WEBSTER:

Railwayism:

"Before this invention, man, richly endowed with gifts of mind and body, was deficient in locomotive powers. He could walk four miles an hour, while a wild goose could fly eighty in the same time. I can run now much faster than a fox or a hare, and beat a carrier pigeon or an eagle for a hundred miles."

The Ashburton Treaty:

"Lord ASHBURTON seems to have done very well. The treaty can hardly be a bad one; any concession was better than war. He owes his success, not more to his own dexterity, than to the present poverty and distress of America. They are in a state of humiliation. The State of Pennsylvania cheats me this year (1842,) out of £50. There is nothing in the crimes of kings worse than this villainy of democracy. The mob positively refuse all taxation for the payment of State debts."

Reviewing:

"What is required in a review? As much knowledge and information upon any one subject as can be condensed into eight or ten pages. You must not bring me a loaf when I ask for a crust, or a joint of meat when I petition for a sandwich."

Eating and drinking:

"If you wish for anything like happiness in the fifth act of life, eat and drink about one half what you could eat and drink. Did I ever tell you my calculation about eating and drinking? Having ascertained the weight of what I could live upon, so as to preserve health and strength, and what I did live upon, I found that, between ten and seventy years of age, I had eaten and drunk forty four-horse wagon-loads of meat and drink more than would have preserved me in life and health! The value of this mass of nourishment I considered to be worth £7,000. It occurred to me that I must, by my voracity, have starved to death fully a hundred persons."

EDWARD EVERETT:

"EVERETT, the American Minister, has been here at the same time with my eldest brother. We all liked him, and were confirmed in our good opinion of him. A sensible, unassuming man, always wise and reasonable."

DR. CHANNING:

"I think CHANNING an admirable writer. So much sense and eloquence! such a command of language! Yet admirable as his sermon on war is, I have the vanity to think my own equally good, quite as sensible, quite as eloquent, as full of good principle and fine language; and you will be the more inclined to agree with me in this comparison, when I tell you that I preached in St. Paul's the identical sermon which Lord GREY so much admires. I thought I could not write anything half so good, so I preached CHANNING."

Description of himself in 1844:

"I am seventy-four years of age, and being Canon of St. Paul's, in London, and a rector of a parish in the country, my time is divided equally between town and country. I am living among the best society in the metropolis, and at ease in my circumstances; in tolerable health, a mild Whig, a tolerating churchman, and much given to talking, laughing and noise. I dine with the rich in London, and physic the poor in the country—passing from the extremes of Dives to the sores of Lazarus. I am, upon the whole, a happy man; have found the world an entertaining world, and am thankful to Providence for the part allotted to me in it."

We are happy to add, as worthy of genius, that there is a good index to the life, and that the book is luxuriously printed on cream, instead of the ordinary blotting paper of our common literature.

Henry Lyndhurst—What to Have?

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

While earnestly thanking you for your just exposure of this bad book, many husbands and fathers, many wives and mothers, would have felt a still deeper gratitude had you given a step further and given the public the real name of the author. You truly say, "as the history of an individual whose position, career and character are well known to the public, it would have done no harm." This sentence shows that you know that there, of course, you have the advantage of me as a comparative stranger. Is it your part of your public duty to impart to the public that knowledge, which, according to your own showing, is universally essential to their highest welfare? In my view it is quite the reverse. Pardon my expression from the American press. A. A. HAYNES.

We believe it is an secret that the author of Mary Lyndon is the physiological lecturer, Mrs. MARY GOVE NICHOLS.

Miscellaneous Foreign Extracts.

The Cork Reporter thus alludes to the honors paid to a distinguished visitor at the Irish lakes: "The Ex-President of the United States, MILLARD FILLMORE, accompanied by Mr. DAVIS, of the New-York bar, and a courier, has been sojourning for the last few days at the Lake Hotel, Killarney. Having been fortunate in having a fine day through the Gap, he expressed himself delighted with the enchanting scenery of this most delightful spot, and the varied beauties of the Lakes and the mountains surrounding. As he was leaving in the morning, the bagpiers connected with the Lake Hotel placed themselves under a tree out of view, and commenced playing 'Yankee Doodle.' As he passed, the boatmen grouped in different parts of the avenue, gave him three hearty cheers, as an acknowledgment of their gratitude to the great Republic of America. The distinguished gentleman repeatedly acknowledged the compliment, which was as unexpected as it was enthusiastic.

SIR CHARLES NAPIER having received an invitation to attend a meeting to be held in Edinburg, in favor of Lord DUNDONALD's plans, has sent a letter in which he says: "I fear it is quite useless attempting to move the Government to do anything useful in the Baltic. So far back as last June, I gave Sir JAMES GRAHAM a plan of attacking Sweaborg with success, and in July I also sent him a plan of attacking Cronstadt; and I believe he was also in possession of Lord DUNDONALD's plan at the same time. No attention was paid to his Lordship that I know of; and the only attention paid to mine was acknowledging it as a clever and able report. Relative to Lord DUNDONALD's plans, his Lordship has done all he could to induce the Government to adopt them. He communicated his secret to me, and I have done all I can with different members of the Government in vain to induce them to carry them out. I think it is now too late to get things ready this season. Uncertain weather will soon commence in the Gulf of Finland, and the operation is of too great importance to be undertaken without ample time to carry it into execution."

A letter in the Ost. Deutsche Post states that the Archbishop of Cherson has arrived in Sebastopol, having been sent for by Prince GORTSCHAKOFF to give his blessing to the army. On the 30th ult. the troops were drawn up upon the Place St. Catherine, and the Archbishop made an address, which is shortly to be published in the Gazette Russe d'Odessa. Turning to Gen. OTTEN-SACKEN, he said: "My son, the last time we met (after the bombardment of Odessa) it was a divine inspiration which led me to say to you, 'Go and fight—and the Lord our God will give you victory.' The words of my prophecy are accomplished. By the defence of the fortress committed to your care you have gained immortal laurels for yourself and your soldiers. And now I say to you once more—Fight and triumph, for you are the elect of the Lord, destined to become the scourge of his enemies." The writer adds: "It is indeed surprising that Gen. OTTEN-SACKEN, whose military career extends over forty-eight years, who has assisted at more than one hundred battles and combats, in which he has usually been found in the first ranks, has never received even the slightest wound."

We read in the Abeille du Nord: "In the month of July, 1809, the Emperor NICHOLAS was passing along the English quay, when he noticed a Bourse traversing the road, followed only by one person, an official from the hospitals. Surprised at seeing neither the parents nor friends of the deceased following the remains to their last home, the Emperor stopped his carriage and asked who it was about to be buried. "A poor orphan of the hospital," said the man. At these words the Emperor left his carriage, removed his helmet, made the sign of the cross, and followed the bearer, his head uncovered. A crowd of people, including some distinguished personages, hastened to follow his example, and it was not long before the cortège became most imposing. Then, turning to the crowd, the Emperor said, in a loud voice, "Now, gentlemen, I hope that you will render the last duties of a Christian to this poor deceased, and that you will accompany the body to the tomb."

A case of somnambulism has occurred at Ferrybridge, from which a boy nine years of age had a very narrow escape with his life. It appears that on Friday evening the family had retired to bed at the usual hour, and about 12 o'clock the little boy's sister heard her brother's voice, apparently in distress, in the adjoining room. She immediately proceeded to his room, where she found him suspended outside the window, with his hands holding on the stone sill, and in great danger of falling to the ground. The sister, with the assistance of the servant girl, extricated the little boy from his dangerous situation, the other members of the family being all the time asleep and undisturbed. Had the boy lost his hold for a moment he must have fallen to the ground, and been probably killed on the spot; and it is remarkable that he did not recover from his dream until after his sister had lifted him with safety into the room.

At Middlesborough-on-Tees, (Eng.,) there exists a singular freak of nature, "a boy with a real tail;" he is about four months old and in good health. He has a perfect caudal appendage four or five inches in length. It springs from the vertebræ of the os sacrum, not the os coccygis, as does the tail of an animal, which is a continuation of the spinal structure. It has caused much interest among the faculty, who have had a consultation whether it would be proper to take it off; but, as upon examination it is found to possess the properties of a limb, having bone, muscle, feeling, &c., and can be moved at the will of the child, it is feared the operation might endanger the child's life by affecting the spinal cord. It may prove of great inconvenience to the possessor in after life, as it will intrude upon the seat of honor.

The Kreuz Zeitung goes into figures to show that Prussia needs not fear a French demonstration on the Rhine; thus France has 101 infantry regiments, of these 41 have been sent to the East, two at Rome, 12 at least must be in Africa, so that only 46 can remain in France. At least 10 regiments are wanted for Paris and other populous towns, leaving but 36 infantry regiments, or 108 battalions, free for other services. These united with a due proportion of troops of other arms, would furnish an army of at most 120,000 men, decidedly too few, the Kreuz Zeitung thinks, to extinguish Prussia. A recent reinforcement of the garrison of Strasbourg, and some remarks thereon in a Belgian newspaper, have called forth this display of German military logic.

A sovereign State has disappeared from the map of Europe. Eniphausen has collapsed into a seigniory of the Grand Duke of OLDENBURG. The important fact is notified in an ordonnance just published by the Ministry of State for Oldenburg. Eniphausen was the smallest State of the German Confederation; its population did not exceed 3,500 souls, nor its Territory 4,500 hectares. It was united to Oldenburg in 1813, but the Congress of Vienna not having recognized the incorporation, its separate rights have been kept alive with Prussian aid until the present time. The Oldenburg Minister announces that the right of Eniphausen to a separate "national flag" has now ceased.

A letter from Constantinople, of July 19, says: "The Sultan has ordered magnificent necklaces in brilliants to be made, as presents for Queen VICTORIA and the Empress EUGENIE, and saddles, also embroidered in brilliants, to be made for the Emperor, the King of Sardinia and Prince ALBERT. The value of these presents will be about 2,000,000 francs. ESSEB PACHA, Minister of Public Works in Egypt, has arrived here. His accompanists the sister of the Viceroy, who was married to KIAMIL PACHA, ex-President of the Grand Council. ABBAS PACHA forced the couple to separate, but since his death they have become reconciled, and again live together.

A letter from Stockholm, in the Cologne Gazette, says: The blockade which the Allied squadrons have established in the Baltic and the Gulf of Bothnia is so complete this year that the trade which was carried on in 1854 between Russia and Sweden to a considerable extent, is completely paralyzed. The presence of the Allied fleets in those seas produces this other important effect, that it forces Russia to keep in the north three great corps d'armée, one of 50,000 men in the neighborhood of St. Petersburg, the second in the city, and in Finmark; and the third along the coasts of Finland.

A Paris correspondent writes in a recent letter: "At the moment of closing my letter, I learn of some [illegible] as Wagram, which is [illegible] to be used as the Government of Paris. The Prefecture claims the power of [illegible] the [illegible] he wishes. It is to be charged with [illegible], which are to be fired by an electric wire at the moment of descent. The experiments this evening will take place in the presence of the Emperor. The balloon on this occasion will be [illegible] with rockets only to enable the spectators to follow its ascent."

A letter from Syria states that an insurrection had broken out in Hebron, under the command of a certain [illegible], and that the Government forces between his forces and those of the Government amounts of two hundred men of the Government had been slain. ABDEL-KADER, it is added, held exclusive possession of Hebron, but the Government was preparing irregular troops to march against him.

The two central deliberative assemblies of the Swiss Confederation last week jointly resolved to put in force the laws against enlistments of men on behalf of foreign powers. The Minister of War has been charged to hinder men from leaving the military contingents of the several cantons, and a circular of similar purport has been addressed to the local Governments.

The Russian Journal Cosmos says: The Cossacks of the Sea of Azof, guided by fishermen, make continual forays along the coast, where they sometimes capture Turkish trading vessels. From the 20th of May to the end of June, they took five coasting traders with timber, three Turks on board. These ships were at Eion, in the neighborhood of Redout Kale.

Courts Martial have been held on two officers in the Crimea for drunkenness while on duty, and they have been sentenced to be cashiered. The officers in question are Captain COLIN MAXWELL, 42d Highlanders, and Captain GEO. SPRONGE GATHOR, 9th Regiment. The Court in both cases recommended the prisoners to favorable consideration.

According to a private letter from Sebastopol, General PELISSIER has made arrangements for the next assault. The first night column will be commanded by Gen. BOSQUET, and the 14th by Gen. SIMPSON. The corps detached to support the assault will be commanded by General PELISSIER himself.

Mlle. CRUVELLI's approaching retirement from the opera stage into married life is formally announced in the musical journals of Paris. No one, however, need be surprised if this lady-like prima retires on affair of weeks, months—or possibly only days.

Le Nord reports from Vienna that the Austrians are buying great bargains in wheat in the Principalities. The purchases are on a large scale, and the price so low that it pays well to export the grain to Bohemia.

The greatest damage done by the late shock of earthquake was at Loueche, (Valais) in Switzerland, where a hotel was thrown down; the persons who were in it escaped with difficulty.

News from Cairo to the 21st ult., states that the Viceroy of Egypt was conducting negotiations with the Bedouins, to induce them to serve in the Crimea.

The Vienna Military Gazette, asserts that Gen. TOTTLEBEN, the able engineer of Sebastopol, is recovering. Le Nord has the same statement.

A report is current that the health of General OTTEN-SACKEN has become so much impaired that he has applied for permission to resign.

Intelligence from Alexandria to the 23d states that Egyptian reinforcements were preparing for the army in the Crimea.

The journals state that the Russian loss in the last attack of the 17th and 18th of June to have amounted to 5,375 men.

Letter from Franklin Pierce—Temperance in Massachusetts.

Position in Massachusetts.

The Boston Journal of Friday has a letter from Hon. FRANKLIN PIERCE upon the Maine question. It is long and elaborate, and concludes with the expression of an opinion that Mr. DEXTER doubts the propriety of calling a convention of fusionists. He says at the end:

"Other reasons also have their weight with me against a union of parties at the present time, which would not have been pertinent to the allowed purpose of the meeting. I do not see how a Whig, even after agreeing with the Free-Soilers, could melt down his principles into a common mass with those of the Know-Nothings, or consent that in the last year's legislature. If we are to go into fusion on the subject, the Know-Nothings of Massachusetts, who claim to be opposed to the extension of Slavery, will have the same claim to the right hand of fellowship as the Free-Soilers propose. It is impossible that Whigs can act with a party such as that was; if it is to be a different party, we ought to be first assured of the difference by their renunciation of opinions which they have carried out in a series of legislative proceedings which have disgraced the fair fame of the Commonwealth, and which it should be the first use of the united party to obliterate as far as possible.

"These remarks are hastily written; in some haste. I may have occasion hereafter to write more deliberately to the same subject.

"FRANKLIN PIERCE."

Interesting from Mexico.

From the New-Orleans Picayune.

By the arrival of the steamship Orizaba at New-Orleans from Vera Cruz, we have Mexican intelligence to the 10th inst.

It is reported that on the 8th inst. the revolutionists were within four leagues of Vera Cruz. All communication between that port and Jalapa, and also between it and Orizaba, had been interrupted since the 5th inst. The combined moving down from the city of Mexico with a country of eight hundred troops had encamped at that Puente Nacional, and fortified themselves there, for the purpose of giving battle to the revolutionists.

We have papers from Vera Cruz to the 9th inst. They contain, however, no notice of anything of the kind. On the contrary, some pleasant sentiments are given, copied from the Diario Oficial, for the departure of the lady of SANTA ANNA from the country. Accounts are given of the successful searches of BLANCO in pursuit of the rebels, and his return to the capital. A report is given of the rout of COMONFORT by Gen. MARQUEZ, in Tlamanalia, and of the desertion of three officers and some soldiers from him to the Government side. Troops under Gen. ZIRAS are said to have returned to the capital from Michoacan, because the department was almost universally reduced to quiet. Reports are given of great preparations being made in Vera Cruz to celebrate the departure of Santa Anna. Gen. GARZINO is said to have completely destroyed a band of revolutionists near Mizantla.

Our papers from the City of Mexico come to hand at 12½ o'clock, thus proving that the road about the communications between Vera Cruz and the capital is not exact.

Destructive Storm at Tampico.

From the New-Orleans Picayune.

On or about the 9th inst. Tampico was visited by a severe norther, which joined to an unusual heavy rain, caused a disastrous overflow of the city. The loss and damage done to goods was very heavy, and the destruction to life and property was no less severe. The pilot stations at the mouth of the river, together with the fort, were completely washed away, as was also the ground which they occupied. A like inundation has not been experienced in Tampico for the last thirty years. Eleven vessels were lying outside the bar, and several of them lost their deckloads. The schooner J. H. Dubs, of New-Haven, from Mobile, with lumber, was struck by lightning, carrying away her mainmast, and injuring her so severely as to cause her to be condemned. On the 25th, after the gale had subsided, the schooner Mary Caroline, Capt. LAURENT, in charge of two pilots, endeavored to cross the bar; she struck the northern breakers, and vessel and cargo soon became a total wreck.

Arrangement of a Prince.

The Hartford Times of the 18th inst. publishes the following statement:

"Saturday evening, Aug. 11, 1855, DAVID DALTON and Mrs. MARY KING, of this city, who, before the Town Registrar, declared their intention of marriage, and were by him, on Tuesday of last week, duly and legally married, on Sunday, Aug. 12, the Very Rev. HUGHES, pastor of the Catholic Church, informed Mr. and Mrs. DALTON that they were not married, and that they must leave the house of the faithful, upon living a life of prostitution, or that he would marry them all right for $10, and they must pay that or he would banish them from Hartford. And the wretches, when they paid him the $10, The Rev. Dr. Dewey, being a close, pleasing man, and was $10 to spare, took out a pocket book, and, in public (but he says, quietly) paid the $10 on condition that he would give us a receipt. Rev. Hughes said, 'No, not a cent less than $10,' and refused to marry us. Believing the assumed confidence he had, and offended at such and such treatment, we left, and turned Mr. DALTON out of the house, and they should not be allowed to live in it, for the purpose. Mr. DALTON said he was sure that he would publish him if he did not treat us right, and show certificate. HUGHES said, 'I will publish and banish you, in Church next Sunday.'"

CANADA

[illegible] Toronto, Monday, Aug. 11, 1856.

[illegible] letters of the DAILY TIMES, it [illegible] that there is at the present moment in [illegible] an epidemic of suicides." In this [illegible] I regret to record that we have an epidemic [illegible] of murders. For the last week or two there [illegible] hardly been a day that the morning papers [illegible] contain an account of some "diabolical" [illegible] "atrocious outrage," "sanguinary riot," [illegible] "murderous conspiracy," "committed in Toronto or its [illegible]

On Tuesday last, there was a row on [illegible] and Toronto Railway, a few miles [illegible], between the Irish and Dutch laborers, [illegible] having been beaten by the Dutchmen, [illegible] number of his countrymen, armed with [illegible] of various sorts, to avenge his injuries. [illegible] result of the affray was that two of the [illegible] were killed, one of them having been [illegible] with an axe, and the other receiving a [illegible] from a heavy iron "fishplate." Three [illegible] are now in Toronto Jail, charged with murder [illegible] the same day, (Tuesday) a man named [illegible], Clerk of the English Cathedral in this city, and Teacher of the Church of England Parochial School, met his death in the village of Coldwater from the hands of an injured husband. A criminal intimacy had existed between POQUIN and the wife of a man named KENNEDY, formerly resident in Toronto. KENNEDY removed to Coldwater, and as the guilty parties continued their intercourse, he at last discovered what was going on, but to avoid exposure, contented himself with obtaining from them a promise that they would never see each other again. Recently, however, by the means of an intercepted letter, he learned that his wife had made an appointment with POQUIN that he should come out to Coldwater on Tuesday last. KENNEDY remained at home, saw POQUIN, had an altercation with him, was struck, and then discharged at the disturber of his peace a double-barreled pistol, the second shot fatally wounding POQUIN, who died next morning. Evidence being given to the Coroner's Jury, that the facts were as above stated, they returned a verdict of "Justifiable Homicide." From the respectable station of the parties, the case has excited much painful interest in Toronto. In the beginning of last week, the city was startled by the rumor that a murder had been committed in Simcoe-street. On the night between Saturday and Sunday, cries of murder had been heard, and on Sunday morning a number of blood-stains were visible for some distance on the wooden sidewalk—and at one spot in particular, the planks were stained with a large quantity of blood. A private watchman, employed several years in the neighborhood, stated that he had seen the murder committed—that a gang of male and female rowdies were assembled drinking on a vacant lot about midnight; that a respectably dressed young man passing, was called upon by a woman of the party, joined her, quarreled with one of the men, and was then set upon by several of the gang, and beaten to death with sticks. His murderers then ran off, and the watchman went up to the body, laid his hand on the young man's breast, to discover if the heart was beating, and found that life was extinct. The murderers returned, and the watchman retiring, saw them carry away the body on a board, from which it fell on the spot marked by the most blood. The corpse was then placed on the board, and borne away; he did not know where. Such was the watchman's story, sworn to before the Police Magistrate. On the other hand, a number of laborers employed on a sewer on Simcoe-street, where all this occurred, state that on the night in question, after receiving their pay, they had had their liquor, and two of them quarreled, one of them struck the other, causing a gush of blood from the nose and a cut lip—and that this was the origin of all the blood stains on the sidewalk. In proof of this, one of the men exhibited a sore lip, which has the appearance, however, of having resulted from a cold, rather than a blow. But some three or four unite in this story, and it is confirmed by a tavern-keeper, who states that the man came into his tavern about midnight, bleeding at the mouth. The watchman's narrative again is uncorroborated, and some of the minute details of it, which could be tested independently of his own testimony, have been disproved. The whole affair remains a mystery. One more atrocious case remains to be added to the catalogue of violent crimes which have been committed here since I wrote you last, and in this instance the poor victim is likely to be unavenged. A respectable girl, residing in Toronto, and earning an honest livelihood by service, having left her relatives behind in the old country, became somewhat unsettled in her mind, and one night wandered out from her lodgings. Not returning next morning, she was advertised as one of the daily papers. On the following evening she found her way back to her lodgings, with marks on her person of deplorable ill-usage, and a sad tale to relate. On one of the nights that she was wandering about distracted, she was encountered on the garrison common by two diabolical ruffians, who violated her, and in overcoming her resistance, treated her so brutally that it was marvelous that she escaped with her life. The poor creature's insanity was confirmed by the lamentable affair, and application was made to have her admitted to the Lunatic Asylum, but was refused on account of want of room, and she was removed to the jail, where she still lies. She is able to give a description of her assailants, but no steps have been taken to hunt them up and bring them to justice, our police force being at present in an utterly disorganized state, and only holding their tenure until a Superintendent arrives from London to organize a new system.

Passing by the smaller affairs of hotel robberies, burglaries, &c., which have given zest to the proceedings of our Police Court during the last week or two, there are still to be noticed two cases of alleged poisoning by the doctors, by mistake or carelessness, which have caused much excitement in the public mind. A Coroner's inquest was held last week on the body of a man named JOB BROOM, who, suffering under an attack of dysentery, had been attended by a medical student named DICKSON. DICKSON acknowledged that by mistake he had given the man an over-dose of sulphate of morphia, and it appears from the evidence, that, to recover BROOM from the stupor caused by the poison, most extraordinary modes of treatment were resorted to—the man's body being pinched, violently shaken, and scalded with hot water, until his very skin was peeled off. This treatment had the effect of rousing him from his stupor, but he died in a few days afterwards. In Toronto, there are two medical colleges—the Trinity School and the Toronto School of Medicine—between which a warm rivalry exists. DICKSON belonged to the latter, and the medical gentlemen connected with the Trinity School pushed the matter to the utmost. One of their number, Dr. PHILBRICK, took the lead in conducting the post mortem examination, and gave his opinion that the man died from the combined effects of morphia and the subsequent treatment. It was alleged on the other hand that BROOM had recovered from the effects of the morphia, and that his death was due to natural causes. The Jury, however, returned a verdict of manslaughter against DICKSON, who now awaits his trial. A few days after this the Toronto School had its revenge. An inquest was held on the body of a man named BLECHIN, who died a few miles out of town, under Dr. PHILBRICK's treatment—also, curiously enough, from morphia, or sulphate of morphia. The man had been drinking hard, and being threatened with delirium tremens, Dr. PHILBRICK was sent for, and to quiet him administered a large dose of sulphate of morphia. The man took it, fell asleep, and never woke. The version of the Jury is to be given to-morrow. If any more such cases are brought to light, people will begin to suspect that Dame Nature, after all, is the safest physician, and that it would be better to risk her treatment, than meet certain death at the hands of bungling doctors.

The only public matter of interest in the Province at present, is the mission of Commandeur DE BELVEZE, who has come to us to initiate a movement for opening commercial relations between this country and France. M. DE BELVEZE has been fêted in quite an unparalleled style in Quebec, Montreal, Kingston and Toronto, and is now on his way to the City of Ottawa. He seems quite astonished at what he has witnessed, having had no conception previously that Canada was such a "great country." Important results are looked for when he makes his report to the French Emperor.

In politics, the sole topic of discussion in Upper Canada for the last month has been the "remedy" for Roman Catholic domination and French Canadian influence under which we at present suffer. The two rival remedies are "Representation by Population," and "Dissolution of the Union." The former, to judge from the general tone of the press, is the more popular, being that Upper Canada shall have in the Legislature, not merely an equal representation with Lower Canada, but a larger representation, corresponding to her greater population.

The harvest is well advanced through the Upper Province. In some localities the wheat has suffered from the Hessian fly, the rust and the recent rains, but on the whole a more than ordinarily exuberant yield is expected. R.

SOUTH CAROLINA POLITICS.

The Principles and Objects of the American Party of South Carolina.

ADOPTED AT A MEETING OF THE STATE COUNCIL, BEGUN AND HELD AT CHARLESTON ON 14TH AUGUST, 1855.

From the Charleston Courier.

1. Resolved, That we ratify and accede to the principles of the American Order, promulgated by the National Council of the organization, held at Philadelphia in June last, subject to the modifications herein contained. To this ratification we attach the following declarations:

1. That with reference to the organization of the American Party in the United States, the American Order of South Carolina is an independent body, whose self-government is supreme, and acknowledges no obligations and duties other than those imposed or adopted and ratified by its State Council in the form of constitution, ritual, platform or resolves.

2. That the primary and fundamental principles and objects of the Order were and are—to the consummation of the end—"that Americans shall rule America;" the essential modification of the naturalization laws, with proper safeguards to preserve the purity of the election franchise; that citizenship shall be constituted the basis condition of the privileges of office and suffrage; and, incidental to these, the restriction, by its influence through suffrage and in official appointments, of all politico-sectarian designs, and of all other than native civil influences. That the jurisdiction of the Order does not extend to and over the political or private opinions of individual members, or the political action of subordinate Councils, upon any other subjects, political or religious. That any agreements upon the latter can only be binding to an extent which good faith may impose.

3. That the judicial power of the United States extends to all legal questions under their constitution, treaties and laws; but that the States, like other sovereign parties to a compact, are the final judges of the nature and extent of the federal compact, and that "each has an equal right to judge for itself, as well of its infraction, as of the mode and measure of redress."

4. That constitutional liberty is the supreme object of our republican system. Subject to this principle, do we construe and accede to the third article of the Philadelphia platform, to wit:

III. The maintenance of the Union of these United States as the paramount political good; or to use the language of WASHINGTON, "the primary object of patriotic desire." And hence—

1. Opposition to all attempts to weaken or subvert it.

2. Uncompromising antagonism to every principle of policy that endangers it.

3. The advocacy of an equitable adjustment of all political differences which threaten its integrity or perpetuity.

4. The suppression of all tendencies to political division, founded on "geographical discrimination, or on the belief that there is a real difference of interests and views" between the various sections of the Union.

5. The full recognition of the rights of the several States, as expressed and reserved in the Constitution, and a careful avoidance, by the General Government, of all interference with their rights by legislative or executive action.

5. That we hold no obligations into which we have entered, and especially those which have relation to the Union, to be inconsistent with our allegiance to our State, with our duty under either the State or Federal Constitutions, with the rights and powers "reserved to the States respectively or to the people," or with our rights as freemen under the latter to resist wrong and injury. That those obligations have sole reference to a Constitutional Union, and we hold none other to be binding upon us, either as members of the American Order or as citizens.

2. Resolved, That the term "Catholic," and all semblance of a religious test, be stricken from the official records and obligations of the American Order of this State, and that all natives be eligible to the Order, and capable of its suffrage, who shall renounce all foreign temporal and ecclesiastical jurisdiction and influence.

3. Resolved, That while we deprecate Romish politico-sectarian influence in America, we are inexorably opposed to any "law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof," or any law which applies "a religious test." That our opinions as men, however, approve only the principle of self-government in Church as State, and we do not approve an ecclesiastical polity which has its source and authority in a foreign land and single potentate. And that we forbear to sustain those, who, from either political or sectarian motives, oppose our contemplated reforms.

4. Resolved, That we disapprove of the adoption of any law which shall affect or disturb the previous existing legal privileges conferred on naturalized citizens.

5. Resolved, That in view of mobocratic tendencies and radical doctrines and practices, we shall ever seek to maintain and conserve "law and order," in consonance with our American republican system.

6. Resolved, That we renounce and repudiate all connection with those Councils (State and Subordinate) or members in the non-Slaveholding States, who have rejected the American Platform of the National Council on the Slavery issues; and hold that they no longer constitute a part or the Order or party which adopted it.

GENERAL POLITICS.

1. Resolved, That now, as formerly, we stand by and will maintain the well-known State Rights Republican principles of South Carolina, which have been declared in her official resolves; we approve the principles of Free Trade, and insist upon a reduction of the Tariff; we oppose Internal Improvements by the Federal Government; we condemn the Administration of President PIERCE, for the appointment of foreigners to represent our country abroad, and for appointing and retaining Free-Soilers in office; and that while we would cordially affiliate with all State Rights parties at the South, we repudiate those who seek combinations with any factions in the Free States, to secure Federal domination and spoils.

2. Resolved, In the language of General QUITMAN:

That the institution of negro Slavery is not only right and proper, but the natural and normal condition of the superior and inferior races, when in contact.

That as the chief element of our country's prosperity, it constitutes a great interest, which is entitled, like other great interests, to the fostering care and protection of the Federal Government, within the sphere of its powers.

That legislation or action, directly or indirectly hostile to this interest, is at war with our compact of Union, and should be resisted by the State and the people affected by it at all hazards.

That the preservation of the institution of Slavery in Cuba, which can only be effected by her independence and separation from the malign influence of European Governments, is essential to the safety and preservation of our own system.

That upon all matters connected with our peculiar domestic institutions the South must look to herself. That no national party organization will fully protect us.

Resolved, That a Committee of three be appointed to superintend the publication of the Platform adopted, and to subscribe and verify the same.

JOHN GUINN GRAY, Charleston.
J. E. RICHARDSON, Sumter.
T. J. MCTRUNDY, St. George, Colleton.

The Other Side—Opposition to the American Party.

Abridged from the Charleston Courier.

A meeting was held last Thursday in Charleston, at the Hibernian Hall, of citizens in favor of State Rights and Southern Rights, and opposed to the party lately organized under the name of the American party. The Hall was filled by the hour of 8 o'clock P. M., and a few minutes thereafter the meeting was organized on motion of Major W. MCK. PARKER, by the call of Hon. W. D. PORTER, one of our Senators, to the Chair, and the appointment of proper officers.

The Chairman on having briefly explained and commented on the objects and purposes of the call which had resulted in the meeting, Col. I. W. HAYNE arose and stated that he had been requested to propose an address and series of resolutions, which represented the views of many who concurred in the call of the meeting. That these resolutions expressed all the opinions so concurring, was not to be expected; it was only necessary that they should state and present broadly and unequivocally, the points in which these could agree, who honestly differed on incidentals of detail.

Appended to the address were the following

RESOLUTIONS.

1. Resolved, That as citizens of the State of South Carolina, we recognize the Ordinance adopted by the People of the State assembled in Convention in 1852, as a part of the fundamental law of our politic, equal in authority as a Declaration of Right, with the Constitution itself, and we proclaim, as a cardinal principle of the present organization,

"That South Carolina, in the exercise of her Sovereign will as an independent State, acceded to the Federal Union, known as the United States of America; and that, in the exercise of the same Sovereign will, it is her right, without let, hindrance, or molestation from any power whatsoever, to secede from the said Federal Union; and that, or the sufficiency of the causes which may impel her to such a separation, she is responsible alone, under God, to the tribunal of public opinion among the Nations of the earth."

We consider the proceedings of said Convention as having authoritatively defined the position of South Carolina and her relation to the Federal Union. And in the opinion of this meeting, the Obligation of the Third Degree, as set forth in the Constitution of the National Council of the United States of North America, known as the Order of Know-Nothings, is a direct denunciation of the principles of this Ordinance, and the position assumed in these proceedings; and the triumph of the Order in this State, would effect a political revolution within her limits.

2. Resolved, That we protest against the proposition put forth by the Grand Council of the Order, in Philadelphia, that "the maintenance of the Union of these States is the paramount political good"—a doctrine which assumes that Government is above the object for which it was instituted—strikes at the very foundation of the sovereignty of the States, and under every violation of the Constitution, however flagrant, and under every degree of oppression and injury, however destructive, demands of the States eternal and unresisting subjection to the central power; and we disapprove as heretical in principle and eminently dangerous to the South, the idolatrous devotion to the Union of these States, so prominently and constantly inculcated by the Constitution and Ritual of the Order, when contrasted with their silence as to the necessity of preserving unimpaired the rights of the States respectively.

3. Resolved, That we hail with unfeigned satisfaction, the recognition by the Democratic Parties of Georgia and Louisiana, of the resolution adopted by the people of Georgia assembled in Convention in 1851; and, as we believe, South Carolina, too, "will, and ought to resist, even (as a last resort) to a disruption of every tie which binds her to the Union, any action of Congress upon the subject of slavery in the District of Columbia, or in places subject to the jurisdiction of Congress, incompatible with the safety, domestic tranquility the rights and honor of the slaveholding States, or any act suppressing the slave trade between the slaveholding States; or any refusal to admit as a State any Territory hereafter applying, because of the existence of slavery therein; or any act prohibiting the introduction of slaves into the Territories of Utah and New-Mexico; or any act repealing or materially modifying the laws in force for the recovery of fugitive slaves."

4. Resolved, That we sympathize with the friends of the slavery cause in Kansas, in their manly efforts to maintain their rights, and the rights and interests of the Southern people, and that we rejoice at their recent victories over the paid adventurers and fanatical hordes of Northern Abolitionism. That the deep interest felt and taken by the decision of the slavery question in it, is both natural and proper; and that it is their right and duty to extend to their Southern brethren in that Territory every legitimate and honorable sympathy and support.

5. Resolved, That in the opinion of this meeting, the existence and progress of the organization known as the Order of Know-Nothings, is opposed theoretically and practically to the principles which have hitherto characterized South Carolina as a State, and the Southern Rights Party everywhere, and render a rally and reorganization of that party in South Carolina a matter of imperative duty with those who remain steadfast in the faith.

6. Resolved, That this meeting disapproves utterly and entirely of the introduction of religious tests into the politics of the country, and believes such a connection opposed to the Constitution of the United States, and Anti-American in spirit and policy.

6. Resolved, That while we regard the facility with which foreigners of all kinds are admitted to the rights of citizenship, and the abuses practiced under the existing naturalization laws, as proper subjects of legislative reform, we unhesitatingly and uncompromisingly reject as a remedy, the Know-Nothing secret oath-bound political associations, possessed of powers so novel and despotic as those of the Order of Know-Nothings; and we utterly repudiate the indiscriminate condemnation and unqualified exclusion from the privileges of citizenship of all foreigners whatsoever, which is the practical result of the triumph of the Order, as illiberal, unjust, unwise, and peculiarly Anti-American.

9. Resolved, That in addition to these stringent objections, we are opposed to the Know-Nothing Order—

Because, by its secrecy and mystery, its oaths and ritual, it is calculated to promote insincerity and duplicity, and to stifle the bold, open, manly conduct and conversation which characterize the man of honor and the freeman.

Because its tendency is to organize a band of spies in every community, to watch the conduct and catch the words of the unsuspecting, to be reported to their secret councils, and made the foundation of political proscription and persecution.

And because its practices strike at social confidence, and all that is dear and valuable in the social relation.

10. Resolved, That it is due to the fraternal harmony which hitherto has existed here, to the future, yet certain perils which, as citizens of the slaveholding States, we must meet, and to resist which successfully, there should exist perfect unanimity, that we should, with the utmost earnestness, appeal to those who have been led into this Order, to come out from it, and strip it of its power to do evil, and to all, of whatsoever political designation they may have been, to unite in opposition to an organization which, if successful, must prostrate the rights of individuals and States, and in the obedience it exacts to the will of a majority, extinguishes the hopes and rights of a minority.

Resolved, That the Chairman of this meeting appoint a Committee of one hundred, who shall be charged with the organization of a Southern Rights party, in opposition to the Order of Know-Nothings.

A. G. MAGRATH and Gen. MARTIN addressed the meeting, after which the question being taken, the address and resolutions were adopted—but one voice in the negative being heard.

Letters were received from Hon. A. P. BUTLER, Hon. L. M. KEITT, Hon. P. S. BROOKS, and Hon. JAMES SIMONS, who were unable to attend the meeting.

The meeting then adjourned.

Progress of the Fever—The Sick and Well—Erroneous Reports.

Correspondence of the Baltimore American.

NORFOLK, Wednesday, Aug. 13, 1856.

GENTLEMEN: From the most reliable sources I send you a correct statement of the fever with us. On Tuesday there were eight deaths; to-day, to noon, four deaths. There is much unnecessary alarm existing. I think that I am safe in saying one-half of the stores are closed, and but little business doing. Norfolk has received a blow from which she cannot recover in six months. Captain BARRON, of the Navy, is convalescent; his physicians say he is out of danger. I regret to hear his youngest daughter is very low. Captain JAS. HENDERSON is sinking; there is no hope for him; he is well known in your city. You will doubtless hear ten thousand reports that this and the other are dead. Several deaths have been published in your paper which were entirely erroneous. Capt. BOWDEN, Cashier of the Virginia Bank, is quite sick, but not of fever. Every disease is styled the fever now. Our people are decidedly more cheerful since we have gotten rid of the alarmists. Tuesday was observed as a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer. Religious services were held in all the churches. I saw the President of the Council in Portsmouth and the Sanitary Committee to-day. They report since Friday last the number of deaths has averaged eight a day. WM. B. COLLINS, reported as dead, has recovered and is attending to his business. Dr. J. N. SCHOOLFIELD is doing well—out of danger. Mr. JOHN EMMERSON is at the Naval Hospital very sick; his brother ARTHUR, clerk of the Court, is attending on him; he is very well. The clerk's office in Portsmouth is closed. Mr. B. W. PALMER, Purser's clerk in the Navy Yard, is sick; he is reported as having the fever. Mr. GEORGE W. CHAMBERS is fast recovering. Considering the few persons now in Portsmouth, we consider from the mortality that the fever is not abating. Dr. E. H. PARKER's (who died from the fever) family are doing well.

The United States steamer of war Macon, is lying off Craney Island; she is free from cases of fever. She comes without contagion, having been fumigated on her passage, she having recently entertained board of surveying officers in search of a vessel on her passage, she looked healthy. She has been 21 months on the Coast of Africa. The following is a list of her officers: Commander, H. K. PURVIANCE; Lieutenants, O. F. MCDONOUGH, WM. W. HOPKINS, W. E. HOSKINS; Passed Assistant Surgeon, J. B. GARRESSHAM; Surgeon, J. P. ARNOTT; Acting Master, G. H. BEEF; Midshipmen, E. PORTER, C. PECK, J. ROCHE; Boatswain, A. POMEROY; Gunner, —— PEAKE; Carpenter, —— MYERS; Sailmaker, G. BOHEM.

The Fever in Portsmouth.

From Portsmouth all accounts agree that there is no abatement of the disease. Everything continues gloomy to the utmost extent. The streets are nearly deserted, and business is almost entirely suspended.

The business of the Navy-Yard is still continued, though over one thousand workmen have taken their discharges. Our correspondent says Commodore MCKEEVER, the officer in the Yard, is one of nature's noblemen. He declares that as long as "there is a man to strike a blow, the gates shall not be closed." For his kindness, and the liberal humanity with which he has executed the orders from the Naval Hospital, he deserves and will receive the grateful acknowledgments not only of our community, but of all who can appreciate true magnanimity of soul.

To the list of the dead in Portsmouth, it is our melancholy duty to add the names of Col. JOHN HARPER, JOHN B. DAVIS, NATHANIEL MANNING and EMILY WILSON.

There is much suffering among the poor sick, and we shall most gratefully appreciate the kind exertions being made in Petersburg for us. We are greatly in want of breadstuffs, particularly of meal, and a supply would be very acceptable.

Our town authorities are doing all they can; but the scourge is so wide-spread that it is beyond their capacity to afford relief to all who are its subjects. We have to take care, not only of the sick, but of the other members of their families, and many other individuals who are thrown out of employment by reason of its visitation.

NEW-YORK CITY.

The "Disinterested" Baggage Smashers.

Reference to the subjoined official statement will serve to prove two very important positions: First; that the immigrants landing on the American sea-board, the half of whom are the proscribed Catholic Irish, and whose predecessors have been so useful in the construction of our railroads and other public works, are not precisely the pauper jail refuse of their own country, and the inevitable tenants of prisons and workhouses in the land of their adoption; and secondly, the list will furnish some probable reasons for the disinterested sympathies of the injured and despoiled baggage smashers and runners, who of course have only been able to earn a miserable livelihood out of the wretchedly starving and beggarly outcasts they have hitherto taken under their sheltering wing, and whom, spite of their charitable wishes, they are allowed to protect and foster no longer.

Ship Derigo	Glasgow	28	3,005 10
Total			$293,499 47

From this list which comprises only the first seventeen days of the month, (little more than a fortnight,) we have the following results:

Passengers, alien	4,176
Citizens and aliens returned	140
Total by steerage	4,316

Cash means reported by the above, $293,499 47, or averaging for each man, woman and child, $67 97.

Now, the number of passengers arriving at the port of New-York in the year 1854, was 319,223. An equal proportion of cash means for that year and number, would give an aggregate sum of no less than twenty-three millions three hundred and thirty-one thousand four hundred and thirty dollars, brought into this country by emigrants of the poorer class from Europe, during a single twelvemonth.

This is altogether exclusive of the amount brought by those who returned from visiting Europe during that time.

If we take each family as composed of five individuals—a man, his wife and three children—or safer still, as composed of three persons, then each emigrant household, instead of being represented as provided with $67 97, say $70 per head, has to face the world with three times that sum as a start, to provide for those who are dependent on the new comer, or $210 to begin the trade of excavator, farmer's laborer, tradesman, or handicraftsman. A very desirable prize for an emigrant runner—for the baggage smasher who will provide Paddy with the "nicest lodgings intirely."

We are told that each fortnight more than a million of dollars is whisked off to Europe. But seldom do the croakers remember the fact that in one twelvemonth the "beggarly outcast refuse of Europe" bring with them annually a sum which more than covers the amount of gold sent thither, and with this addition: the money they bring is so much added to the national wealth. The money we send is only so much paid for articles we have already appropriated—perhaps eaten, worn, or in some way consumed, and to be now deducted from stock.

Unfortunately the Irish laborer is fond of whisky; his trip over the salt ocean and his forced abstinence have no tendency to diminish his wish for the "least drop in life of the cratur" as soon as he lands in a country where all is new, wild and strange to him. Recollections of Old Ireland and the possibility that he may never more tread her green sod, and unexpected collisions with "friends" from "Connaught" or "Dublin County," necessitate a drink, to drown all care and inspirit him for his new scene of exertion. The landlord of his boarding house is kind enough even to drink with him, and he is not so proud but that he will invite just a few friends. At last poor Patrick's money is exhausted; his inclination to leave the City diminishes with his lessened ability. And is not this the past history of thousands, who might now well parody the words of poor HOOD, in reference to those "body snatchers," the clients of the pure-minded, high-souled and patriotic politicians—of men who would neither sell nor purchase a vote by descending to flatter and cajole the multitude, or do the dirty advocacy of the worst people of the worst party!

"The 'baggage smashers,' they have come
And made a snatch at me;
It's very hard them sort of men
Won't let a body be."

The Brooklyn Ferries.

The Brooklyn Union Ferry Company should strive to systematize the running of the Hamilton-avenue boats. At present, passengers crossing on these are often subjected to the most vexatious detention, by the ill-management which obliges a boat to rest—sometimes for nearly half an hour—in the middle of the river, while the docks at either side are preoccupied. This is an annoyance connected with the busiest hours of the day, —say from 11 A. M. to 2 P. M.

The Company might likewise do something like justice to a monopoly-ridden public, by running two boats up to at least 11 P. M. They now only run one boat from 9 to 12 P. M., which boat is unable to accomplish the complete trip under half an hour, so that passengers frequently have to wait half an hour at either side, in order to get across in the Hamilton-avenue boat. A quarter of an hour's delay late in the night would surely be a sufficient test of the patience of passengers.

The Common Council can bring the property of monopolists by attending to their complaints. Hundreds of families—now forced to reside in New-York by the illegalizing of nearly all the Brooklyn forty shilling freeholds—desire to do their duty, if they were sure of anything like decent ferry accommodation, especially in the direction of South Brooklyn.

Alderman Sheridan and Mayor Wood.

Alderman HENRICK claims in his paper that the results of the Primary election in the Nineteenth Ward were anything else than favorable to the Mayor "Wood" party. The "HENRICK ticket" was ahead, it seems, by one-half, but the inspectors gave out before the votes had been counted, that "Wood" was altogether ahead, and so the report of the Alderman's defeat grew. "In close connection" with this matter, yesterday's Atlas has the following:

EXTRAORDINARY POWERS.—We understand that Mr. WILLIAM ROCHE, proprietor of the premises known as McDonnell's Tavern, in Forty-second-street, has commenced a suit against FRANCIS J. TWEEDY, Captain of the Nineteenth Ward Police, for trespass, in forcibly entering his premises on Thursday afternoon, and intruding three "star-spangled" policemen into the private apartments of his family, without any lawful authority, at a time when there was no appearance of disorder, and when no one pretended that any felon or criminal was concealed therein. The principle that "a man's house is his castle," is involved in this matter; and the verdict of the Jury will decide whether our policemen have a right to force an entrance into a citizen's private dwelling without a legal warrant from a magistrate. The trial of this case will produce an immense excitement in the community, and will probably involve Mr. Mayor WOOD in some trouble he little anticipated, when he gave his policemen orders to "defeat the HENRICK ticket, at all hazards." When policemen become housebreakers, it is time for citizens to look about, and see if the laws will not protect their domestic firesides from the violence of men armed by clubs, acting under authority of "FERNANDO the First." Capt. TWEEDY said he had "orders" to make a forcible entry into the house of Mr. ROCHE; and the trial of this suit will probably disclose the individuals or functionary who issued the "orders." Wait, and you'll see fun!

THOMAS E. DOWNING, City Inspector.

CITY INSPECTOR'S OFFICE, New-York, Aug. 18, 1856.

Serious Accident.

On the afternoon of Saturday last, as the wife of policeman BIRMINGHAM, of the Second Ward, was engaged in cleaning windows of the third story of the house No. 64 Gold-street, she fell to the ground from the sill on which she was standing. She was taken up in an unconscious state and attended by a physician, who now considers her in a fair road for recovery.

Probably Fatal Casualty.

On Saturday afternoon, as an unknown man, supposed to be the captain or mate of some ship, was crossing Water-street, near Peck-slip, he slipped and fell, striking his head with great force against the curb-stone. He was at once conveyed to the station-house of the Second Ward and then transferred to the New-York Hospital, his injuries being thought dangerous by the physician.

Coroners' Investigations.

KILLED ON A DERRICK.

An inquest was held on Saturday by Coroner HILTON, on the body of JOHN HOUGHTON, late of No. 150 West Twenty-eighth-street, who came to his death by being struck by a derrick block while at work in a manufactory in New-Jersey. The Jury returned a verdict of accidental death, but strongly censured the conduct of the proprietors of the works for not furnishing greater protection against accidents.

DROWNED.

Yesterday Coroner O'DONNELL held an inquest on the body of HENRY H. SCHLICHTENG, a lad aged 13 years, late of No. 34 Oak-street, whose death was caused by drowning. Deceased left home on Thursday last, in a fishing-boat, and had not since been heard of until yesterday forenoon, when his body was found floating in the water at Pier No. 30, East River. It is supposed that while angling, deceased fell overboard. Verdict—"Accidental drowning."

THE LATE MURDER OF A WIFE.

Coroner O'DONNELL on Saturday held an inquest at Bellevue Hospital on the body of BRIDGET MURRAY, late of No. 70 Gouverneur-street, who came to her death by stabs received at the hands of her husband, OWEN MURRAY, on the morning of the 9th instant. The evidence taken gave but little further particulars than was furnished the readers of the TIMES on the morning following the fatal deed. Deceased was a hard-working and industrious woman, she supporting herself and child without any aid from her husband. The evidence as to the facts in the case was given by WILLIAM ROBERTS, who, it will be remembered, was himself stabbed on the same occasion, corroborated by WM. CLARKE and MRS. ROBERTS, who resided in the same house. The Jury, after a short

THE 34th Congress.

The National Era, indulging in speculations as to the future of the Free-Soil movement, in less hopeful tones circumstances seem to justify. It is infected with that skepticism as to the existence of a North, which Washington entertains as a chronic complaint. The Era admits a Congressional majority in favor of limiting Slavery aggression; admits the majority to be a practical one upon all direct issues; but gravely doubts its constancy in presence of those revolutionary expedients to which a Southern minority is prepared to resort; and which will very certainly be put in practice to defeat the measures called for by a Northern constituency. We think the Era mistakes both the profundity and the direction of the Free-Soil sentiment. It does so, because it places undue faith in the precedents of 1848 and 1850, as bearing upon the question of to-day.

It must not be forgotten that all the great names that gave energy to that Union-saving favors which resulted in the Compromise of 1850 have passed from the stage. Their countenance, and the authentication those questionable measures derived from their friendship, are not to be had for the subversive policy of the present Administration; could not be had, were CLAY and WEBSTER, and CALHOUN, still alive; and FOOTE, and CUSHING and CASS still prominent in public life; for all the energies of those men were directed to the maintenance of sacred compacts, which the whole influence of General PIERCE and his friends has been employed to nullify. The Northern Representative of to-day goes to Washington without any doubt of the sentiment that sends him there, or its requirements; and without any hope of finding a great name in whose shadow to shelter himself, when tempted to desert his mission. He is bound to fidelity, or bound to go to that limbo to which OLIN, and SHANNON, and McDONALD have been dispatched by an outraged and disgraced constituency. Corruption and other sinister influences, can alone account for the course of unfaithful Northern Delegates to the last Congress; they will be neutralized, or outweighed, in the next, by the entire certainty of political ruin attendant upon any desertion of the cause. There will be no Federal Executive in prospect, ready to compensate the infamy of the offender by a reward as infamous. The present Executive has nothing to give. Neither in fame nor in a substantial equivalent for it, has the Northern Doughface anything to hope; while in fidelity to the sentiment which selected him, he can clearly recognize an exceeding great reward.

Nor do we apprehend that timidity on the part of a liberal majority in the House, which will induce it to yield to the resistance of a "factious minority." Two years ago, Northern men declined to establish a revolutionary precedent by exerting the mischievous capacities of the minority, in putting a stop to the Kansas-Nebraska business. They did so, because unwilling to bear the odium of introducing expedients, the certain result of which must be serious convulsions, if not federal dissolution. But in the coming Congress such discussives must cease to operate. Revolution has actually been inaugurated by the Kansas-Nebraska party, and sanctioned by the whole weight of federal authority. It has trampled the act of Territorial organization under foot. It has trampled constitutions, laws, popular sentiment and popular rights under foot. It has invaded, arms in hand, the free soil of a Territory, usurped an absolute despotism there, and proclaimed the nullification of all legal authority to be the first duty of the Slave Power in prosecuting its aggressions upon freedom. Strengthened by this example, a Northern majority can have no hesitation as to its course. It is bound to restore the relations of North and South to the position they occupied in 1853, and then, from that vantage ground, assert that predominance in the Federal system for the Free States which is due as well to their more liberal ideas, as to the numerical preponderance of their aggregate population. If the measures necessary to effect this restoration are retarded by a minority in the House, or by a majority in the Senate, or by the veto of of a misguided Executive, there can be no course but to refuse the supplies to carry on a Federal Government which is only useful to defeat justice, sanction violence and fraud, and authorize the worst actions of the worst men. The course may be revolutionary, but it is a later step in a revolution, the earlier stages of which have already been traveled by the Pro-Slavery Power.

Entertaining these views—and the Washington organ of Free-Soilism may rest assured they are the views of the Northern States, as a body—we see no reason to distrust the fidelity of our delegates to the Thirty-fourth Congress. Assuming their sentiments, the temptations to go right are so much more powerful than any conceivable temptations to deviate, that on the worthless score of self-interest we are sure of them. What is the Slavery propagandism without Federal patronage to support it? And what prospect has it of this support after the Presidential election of next year? The jobs is not easy, and will find no bearers, without larger wages than it will ever again have the ability to pay.

English Colonization in South Africa.

England has experimented extensively and expended money largely in colonization, but with what success may be seen from the course of America eighty years ago, the unquiet of Australia to-day, the unproductive state of Canada for years, and the probability that her possessions in Southern Africa will, in due time, follow the paths trodden by the two former.

With the improvement of the times, however, much more "civilization," is bound up in the prospectus for the African colony than had been extended to the others. Humanity enters largely into the intended improvements; and a system, tried to some extent by Sir GEORGE GREY, in New-Zealand, when presiding over that Colony, is proclaimed to be the panacea for such ills as colonists are heir to, having troublesome neighbors, jealous natives, warlike Caffres on their borders.

The Governor of the Cape of Good Hope, a man of much erudition, affability of character and a decided turn for humanizing the savage races—who takes a just pride in directing the tomahawk to wood-splitting for the domestic fire, and transporting the scalping knife from the skulls of antagonistic Indians to the social dinner board; and who has had some experience in New-Zealand, chiefly in collecting the traditions of the races there, which he has lately published under the title of Polynesian Mythology, proposes, if the Government gives him a grant of forty-thousand pounds, (to begin with,) to make British Caffraria intact able to protect itself from the surrounding settlements, and to provide in a few years for the necessary expenditures of the Province.

In view of the large sums spent in the late wars against the Kaffirs, some statesmen are ready to receive any plan that may offer the slightest possibility of success. Money and men have been expended with but very doubtful prospects, and anything which can tend to lessen the expenditure of either and hold the Colony, even at the present uncertain tenure, will readily meet attention. Sir GEORGE GREY then, proposes, in the first place, to receive £40,000 the present year, after which his programme goes on to state that he will fill British Caffraria with Europeans—from the unrolled pensioners of England—each man to be bound to serve for seven years, his movements to be restricted to within seven miles of his home, which is to consist of a cottage and one acre of land.

Such is the basis of his plan, and from which he will provide for the defence of its success by establishing a force of 5,000 men. It is to be a militia or semi-military Colony, to overawe the Kaffirs, and otherwise seduce them into obedience and fraternity, by giving them employment on public works, and gaining sufficient influence over them to make them amenable for introduction into educational institutions, and in a word to give them and their children "a civil character suitable to their condition." Under this code, he is enthusiastic in the faith that the warlike and obstinate enemies of Britain will become her fastest friends, turn them into a source of wealth, strength and security for British settlers, make them "useful servants, consumers of colonial goods, contributors to the colonial revenue." This plan is brilliant, apparently holds the germ of ultimate success, and strikes a casual reader withal as one which, while presenting a sufficiently strong military character, is also overflowing with benevolence, humanity and a judicious regard for progress and civilization. But we may reasonably doubt its fulfillment to the full measure expected by its inventor.

If he had even been crowned with a comparative success in New-Zealand, we cannot be so sure that the same plan would so appropriately fit Caffraria. In the former, the natives had already, before the advent of Sir GEORGE, been tamed down, had mingled with Europeans, and as the English authorities state, had been found as sailors in English ships. Even if they had been completely antagonistic, their numbers were not sufficient to hunt out the settlers. The Kaffirs and Fingoes, on the contrary, are numerous; "ready enough," says the London Daily News, "to adopt our arts of war and destruction, * * they are neither disposed to be friendly, nor very much afraid of us. To increase their power as Sir GEORGE GREY proposes, is to make them more dangerous." We remember that in 1852, a writer from the scene of war corresponding with the London Times, proposed to exterminate the Kaffirs as the wolves were exterminated in England, "by giving a reward for each head, say £2 for men and £1 for women and children." The exasperation of the writer was inspired by the fact that four thousand Kaffirs kept at bay five thousand regulars and two thousand levies and Fingoes. This was but another evidence of the fact stated by one of the British officers at the same period, that the Kaffirs—in his own words—"are a very noble, brave set of people, and they are immensely superior in every way to the colonists, for whom we are spilling our best blood."

Sir GEORGE GREY will have different work on hand than picking up the legends of the Kaffirs, especially as his scheme has been barely tested, and not sufficiently so to give anything but doubt as to its efficiency. In Mr. FOX's Six Colonies of New-Zealand, the idea and its working were reviewed, and the author came to the conclusion that they, whether viewed in a military or a colonizing aspect, proved costly failures, affording a most decided warning against the continuance of the experiment, or its renewal elsewhere." And Mr. ADDERLEY, writing (1st inst.) to the London Times, in allusion to the present colonization speculations, exposes some of their fallacies based on New-Zealand experience. He says:

"Governor Grey, indeed, reported of this (February, 1855,) as of his other settlements, that it was progressing towards comfort, 'they have,' said he, 'three horses and 171 head of cattle among them.' But Mr. Fox, (author of the Six Colonies,) ferreted out of blue-books that even these had been purchased for them by Government, which, in fact, supported these helpless and unfit colonists, and even housed them. For £37,843—at the rate of £87 per man—a fact significant of the sort of jobbing which makes a proposition of this sort very popular in a colony."

But even in canvassing the probable success of the plan, we are somewhat ahead of the question. We might have stopped at the initistory step of colonization, and agree with those who think Sir GEORGE will not get his five thousand settlers to begin with.

The bonus offered for the restricted servitude of seven years is ridiculous; a cottage and one acre of land! Why, Sir GEORGE GREY must be dreaming, far away back in some distant era of the world, or possibly with the powerful though shadowy Divinities of the Polynesian Mythology.

In this day of emigration, adventure and fortune-hunting and making, and with the inducements afforded by America and Australia, we opine that few will ambition to live seven years of constant disturbance, turmoil and warfare with the Kaffirs, to purchase (if they live,) a cottage and one acre of land. Our deck laborers receive at least twenty-four English shillings a week. Our Western territories invite labor, and offer certain success. Our soldiers, after five years' service, have a grant of one hundred and sixty acres. These facts, together with such as the recent Australian excitements have given publication to, are well and widely known, and meet the desires of the human breast much more extensively than Sir GEORGE GREY's Utopia, even if it were minus the Kaffirs.

Know-Nothingism in South Carolina.

From the nature of the proceedings at two meetings recently held in Charleston, S. C., the particulars of which will be found on another page, Know-Nothingism does not seem to promise a long life in, or to become one of the permanent institutions of that State. One of those meetings, which was composed entirely of the professed friends of the American Party, repudiated the distinctive characteristic of the Order, the Catholic test, and refused to be bound by the acts of the National Council, while the other meeting which was appropriately held in "Hibernian Hall," denounced the party in all its phases and principles, as opposed to the doctrine of State rights and the interests of the South. The American Party, manifestly, has but a slender chance in the Palmetto State, for spreading, and we would advise SAM not to calculate too confidently on the support of that member of the confederacy in the coming contest for the Presidency. South Carolina does not consider the preservation of the Union the "paramount duty" of the States, but that is SAM's paramount idea, next to the exclusion of foreigners and Catholics from office.

Mexican Insurrections.

We publish in another part of this morning's paper some late and interesting intelligence from Mexico. If the accounts we continue to receive from that curious Republic came from any other country in the world, we should doubtless be justified in believing that the existing Government (whatever it might be,) was fast drifting into irretrievable ruin. But "Mexican affairs" have for so long a time been a synonyme for anarchy and confusion, and the news by one mail has so invariably been contradicted by the next, that we may safely question the efficacy of those bombastic manifestoes, proclamations, and pronunciamentoes, with which the insurrectionists have opened their new campaign.

According to the revolutionary programme, the objects of the movement lately set on foot in the Northern Departments are to depose SANTA ANNA and give liberty to an op*pressed people. If, however, we are to judge* of this by preceding movements of a similar nature, its promoters would seem to be actuated rather by a desire for power, for plunder, or, at best, for the gratification of a reckless spirit of adventure, than by honest, patriotic motives. If the leaders of the present insurrection were laboring with a single eye to their country's weal, they would deserve and should receive our warmest sympathies. But we have no proof that their intentions are patriotic; nor can we infer from their antecedents that they care much about the justice of their cause. As to their coadjutors—the filibusteros from this side of the Rio Grande—we can only regard them as a band of adventurers, acting on the principle that might makes right, whose chief exploits have been to rob conductas, attack defenceless villages and towns, and spread desolation and dismay among the wretched peasantry of Northern Mexico. The evils which the success of such a party would entail are frightful to contemplate; the Government it seeks to establish would be one of vile licentiousness, under which, neither the lives nor properties of citizens would be safe. It may be true that the downfall of SANTA ANNA would not be regretted by any one here. He has always been opposed to the interests and people of this country, and, as a man, his character and reputation have been severely and justly censured. But the Government he has endeavored to establish on a firm basis, is the only one suited to the exigency of the times and the disturbed state of the Republic, of which he has twice been chosen chief. To suppress the incessant depredations of the Indians, and the independent and arbitrary insurrections of party factions, required the strong arm of one ready to assume responsibility in any and every emergency. To obtain this and thereby secure, if possible, a permanent peace, the majority of the Mexican people have been willing (as may be seen by the result of more than one election,) to continue the Dictator in office, (for want, it may be, of an abler and better man,) and invest him with ample powers to act as he saw fit. Hence, the insurrection of ALVAREZ at the South, though in active operation for over two years, has proved utterly fruitless—the Pinte Chief and his adherents being yet entrenched within the mountain fastnesses of Guerrero, shut out from civilization, and cut off from all intercourse with the other States of the Republic. The insurrection of the North is more serious than that at the South ever was; and it has become more formidable still, since large bands of filibusteros from this side of the Rio Grande have joined its ranks. Though it does not appear that the Revolutionists are strong enough to depose SANTA ANNA and overturn his Government, it is nevertheless clear that the Dictator is unable to oppose them successfully at any distance from his capital. Their depredations will therefore for a time be carried on with impunity. What the result will be it is impossible to foresee. It would indeed seem as if the Republic of Mexico, through the exhausting strifes of its citizens, was doomed to fall in pieces, and become the prey of the first bold adventurer who, with men and means at his command, may seek to subjugate its soil.

Munificent Merchants.

We publish on another page a biographical sketch of Hon. ABBOT LAWRENCE, whose death occurred at his residence in Boston on Saturday morning. Mr. LAWRENCE has long occupied a very prominent position in the public affairs of our country, and his private and public acts of munificence would alone have gained him distinction, even though he had not taken a prominent part in political affairs.

The men who have done most for the benefit of the public, in this country, by appropriations of money for benevolent objects, have been our merchants, who raised themselves from poverty, and not those who inherited their wealth. Boston has produced many men who have appropriated very liberal sums for the public good, whose examples have, doubtless, had the effect of stimulating others to similar acts of munificence. Among the most prominent of them are THOMAS HANDYSIDE PERKINS, JOHN A. SEWELL, GEORGE PEABODY, JOSHUA BATES and the LAWRENCES. These men were not all natives of Boston, but they were sons of Massachusetts, and their munificent gifts were bestowed to advance the interests of the capital of their native State. The gifts of none of these liberal merchants, however, approached the munificent endowments of ASTOR and GIRARD of this City, and GIRARD of Philadelphia. But we look in vain among the native population of this State, the descendants of its earlier inhabitants, for any acts of public munificence like those of which the Bay State can show so many examples. Our large landed proprietors, with the exception of GERRIT SMITH, whose property has increased so largely in value by the enterprise and industry of others, have not manifested anything of that benevolent munificence which has distinguished our mercantile millionaries who have been the creators of their own fortunes. Our Knickerbockers, it must be confessed, have evinced a very decided disposition to keep their property in the hands of their own families.

We have rarely read a more touching expression of manly generosity, than the simple letter of AMOS LAWRENCE to his brother ABBOTT, congratulating him on hearing that he had given fifty thousand dollars to found a scientific school in Cambridge.

Cheap Bread—A Way to Obtain it.

The fall in the price of Flour, and the continued small size of Bakers' loaves, are questions now being earnestly discussed. We do not intend to enter deeply into the merits of the discussion, but aim merely to set forth a few facts which will enable our readers to form a clearer idea of the anomalous state of the matter in dispute, and to suggest a plan whereby more bread can be had for the same sums of money than by the purchase of bakers' loves, while these are made so unjustifiably small, in proportion to their cost.

The reduction in the value of flour within a month or thereabouts, has been very decided, brought about by the increased receipts from the interior, and the restriction of purchases within the limits of immediate wants. This reduction has enabled many bakers to secure stock on comparatively easy terms; but some of this class had previously laid in a supply at advanced figures, fearing that a greater scarcity and higher prices might be experienced than was the case when they made their purchases. Their apprehensions have not been realized; on the contrary, flour has been gradually becoming more abundant and less valuable.

These circumstances have been favorable to consumers, but the few bakers who had bought a supply of flour when the article was scarcer and dearer than at the present time, have been placed in an uncomfortable position by the change, and in order to avoid serious loss themselves, they have been making others shoulder their burdens. Not having entirely exhausted their costly stocks,—they have been striving to work them off, on the scale adopted when the materials were not available on such reasonable terms, thereby withholding from all who buy their bread whatever advantages they are entitled to, because of the increased plentiness and cheapness of flour.

This course is undoubtedly wrong, but is, in a degree, natural; and finding that complaints had not been made against such bakers as pursued it, for the reasons alleged,—the whole body, as a rule, followed suit. Thus a kind of union has been formed and sustained among them, to keep down the size and to keep up the price of their loaves. This game has been played long and successfully,—so that they have enjoyed most of the advantages arising out of the relative abundance and decreased value of flour, while their customers have not gained anything worth speaking of from this favorable change.

In order to blind the unfortunate victims of this cost of twenty-organized conspiracy,—most bakers have been urging the plea that the qualities of flour which they use have not become much plentier or cheaper, so far this season,—but that in common kinds alone have such alterations occurred. This is not the case. All grades of flour have increased in abundance and decreased in price,—the low and medium brands of course, participating more in these changes than the better qualities. It should be understood, however, that but few bakers use what are known as the better qualities of flour, and that those who do use them, employ them only in the manufacture of fancy bread,—but very little of which the majority of consumers ever taste.

Bakers generally purchase medium grades, such as good and fancy Western and Southern, and favorite to extra State, in all which the changes referred to have been very distinct. Such brands, bought within the period of increasing supplies and falling prices, have constituted the bulk of their working stock,—and the fact that they have lately been able to buy such a good deal lower than they could earlier in the year, ought to have induced them to allow their customers to at least derive some benefit from the change so beneficial to themselves. They, however, have been tempted to wrong those who buy their bread,—by purchasing flour at greatly reduced rates, and making no considerable enlargement in the size of their loaves,—thereby demonstrating the truth of the adage, "The more we have the more we covet."

This has now become a kind of habit with them, so that they cannot be persuaded to abandon it, unless by some arguments which will touch their purses. We would advise consumers of bakers' loaves to buy flour and make their own bread, as they can do very profitably for themselves, until they show the necessity of obedience to the laws of supply and demand, to a class ever prompt to submit and enforce submission to them, when they favor their own interests, but who are ever slow to acknowledge their legitimate influence when they promise to serve others.

FROM WASHINGTON.

New-York State Politics—Prospects of the Fusionists.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, Aug. 18, 1855.

The prospect of a Hard-Shell fusion with the Know-Nothings of New-York imposes. There is nowhere else for the Hards to go but to the Hindoos, and no other haven for the K. N.'s than the bosom of the Hards. DICKINSON, BROWSON, CLINTON and BEARDSLEE, have been very cautious to say nothing against the Natives during the eighteen months that that agitation has been flagrant, while it is notorious that the bulk of the party went over to ULLMANN last Fall, leaving their own appropriate candidate, Judge BRONSON, by the wayside with a paltry division of 20,000 straggl*ers, lame, blind and broken-winded camp followers* with whom Falstaff would have disdained to march through Coventry. The reason that the overtures for a fusion of Hards and Softs failed, was, that the Administration discovered that the cost would exceed the profits. The fusion of Whigs and Republicans being substantially arranged, the PIERCE managers very clearly discern that any initiative movement on their part must result in an ignominious defeat. It is interesting to listen to the varying cries of the factions. A few weeks ago the Atlas and its satellites were singing "Fusion" in full chorus; the tune is now changed to "Confusion to all Fusions,"—and the Executive war upon the K. N.'s, which was suspended during the negotiations, is resumed with unexampled virulence.

The Administration and the Softs being out of the field, the probable strength of this new coalition becomes a matter of some interest. The entire vote in the State last Fall was 476,000, or in that neighborhood, divided as follows:

Regular Whig vote on Governor	100,000
Democratic vote on Governor	190,000
Know-Nothing vote on Governor	122,000
Hard-Shell vote on Governor	33,000
United K. N. and Hardshell vote	156,000

During the intervening nine months the Hard-Shell rebellion has been so nearly crushed out, that it retains little hold upon the minds of the insurgents. And the Know-Nothings, who, up to the period of the State election last November, had been steadily gaining strength, and appeared to be on the high road to political control, are now admitted to have then reached their culminating point, and to have been since declining in influence and power. In addition to which, the Order in New-York has been since formally sold and conveyed to the South, and is now nothing more than an exotic of forced and sickly growth. It has no claim to popular sympathies, and it is difficult to perceive where, out of New-York, Brooklyn, and Buffalo, it is to obtain any votes. Indeed the Philadelphia jugglery effectually divorced the Order from its best supporters. How is it possible for WHEELER, Judge OLIVER, PECK and MAURICE to acknowledge connection with a faction which, while affecting to evade, did, to all intents and purposes, endorse and adopt the infamy of violating the Missouri Compromise!

There is no question that a vast majority of native born citizens sanction the principle that our laws should be made and administered and the country governed by native Americans; but when the movement for carrying this great principle into effect fell into such hands as those of LEWIS, SAMMONS and BARKER, its failure was certain. For the present the contest is suspended. No repeal and no modification of the naturalization laws can be hoped for. The evils, however, which the American party denounce, are every year becoming more serious, and in due time the needed measures of reform will be taken in hand by the statesmen of the country, and the right of citizenship will be limited to natives. In the meantime we have nothing to do but to wait upon events.

If these views are correct, it is manifest that the Know-Nothing vote in New-York at the ensuing election will be only nominal. The party is reduced to a faction. Most of the Hard-Shells who last year voted with it will return to the regular Administration or Soft-Shell standard, and the mass of the Whigs who took service under strange leaders will follow the Republican Fusion banners. The most liberal estimate cannot assign to the K. N. and Hard-Shell coalition more than from 75,000 to 100,000 voters. From these premises it seems that a "Republican" victory, by a very great majority, is placed beyond any probable contingency.

Gov. HUNT's letter is not a very singular production. There are always very marked exceptions to great national movements. The son of FRANKLIN could have taken a distinguished part as a friend of the American Revolution, but he thought it his duty to adhere to the cause of his country's and his father's enemies. Gov. HUTCHINSON of Massachusetts, a most excellent, honest, and upright man, would have been a very important accession to the party of Independence, but he choose the British side. No true friend of the United Colonies hesitated because these gentlemen wavered and turned back. We may admit the sincerity of Gov. HUNT, and yet not regret that he will be swamped in the tide which he seeks to stem with a gray goose-quill. He wishes the North to postpone action until we have made another appeal to the South. What appeals and how many of them does he desire? Has the South shown any disposition to restore the Missouri Compromise? Has the South anywhere or in any manner condemned the tumults and outrages in Kansas? Does Mr. HUNT expect to delude anybody with the suggestion that the South means to right the wrongs which she has herself inflicted upon the North since the "finality" of 1850? Is it possible that he can deceive himself with any such idea? As I know his intelligence and ability, I do not believe that he has the slightest hope that the South, moved by reason, the obligations imposed upon her by past Compromises, or by the stern that which she has violated, will do the least justice upon Slavery.

The Federal Court for Kansas Territory has decided in favor of ATCHISON's Legislature and against REEDER on the question of the seat of Government. Of course it has. It was said by Kansas to cooperate with ATCHISON in all things. In the same spirit this same Court decided the question of Slavery before setting foot in the Territory, for the two Judges from Slave States took slaves with them and now hold them. The assurance of the Legislature in passing this resolution and of the Court in giving it, may be estimated from the facts that one of the three Judges, Isaac Cook from Ohio, refused to accept the appointment, and another, ELMORE had been dismissed for land speculations. REEDER was suspended a month before he was removed, in order that he might not interfere with the Legislative acts, but ELMORE was permitted to act for the purpose of ratifying its proceedings after dismissal.

It is asserted that Dr. MORTON's claim founded on the other discovery, is now under investigation in one of the Departments with a view to its payment out of the Contingent fund. This seems improbable, but I observe that the Committee on TUCKERMAN's defalcation report that $50,000 of it may be recovered out of the indemnity expected to be allowed to MORTON. This sum was advanced by TUCKERMAN for lobbying purposes.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

IMPOSTORS—BEWARE OF THEM.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

SIR: There are persons traveling in various parts of the country, imposing on the sick, by representations to be connected with me or my practice, some pretending to be my sons, or my pupils, or bearing my name, others even attempting to personate myself. To guard the public against these impostors, I wish to say that I am myself always at home, and that there is no person, traveling or located, in any manner connected with me in practice, or who has any right to hold forth my office or refer to me. I have no sons absent from me, and I never had a pupil, excepting Dr. Calvin M. Fitch, now in Chicago, who, however was never associated with me in practice, but now as professional connection with me, and has no office at No. 714 Broadway, New-York.

IMPORTANT NEWS.
VALUE OF RICHE'S IMPROVED WILDMAN'S SAL-MANDER SAFES.

A fire fire of the 8th instant, which consumed the brick building occupied by Mr. John F. Thomas, as a Stove Ware Room in the City of Savannah, Ga., of the above description, containing the books, papers, and money of Mr. Thomas; and although the building was all ablaze, on every side, the safe remained in its place, undisturbed, and in the same order and condition as when placed there, except a slight discoloration to the outside of a few papers and the backs of such as were other wise covered by the Room (preserved in the safe while at the greatest heat.) C. H. CAMPFIELD, Agent.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Aug. 6, 1855.

I take pleasure in corroborating the foregoing statement, and would add that the books are now as.

Aug. 6, 1855. J. F. THOMAS, Savannah, Ga.

SINGER'S SEWING MACHINES.—THE HIGHEST prize from the most competent judges. The Editors of the Scientific American, who possess unrivaled advantages for knowing everything useful in the way of new inventions in their power of all kinds, publish a long article in claims, in a note appended to a claim of I. M. SINGER for another improvement, remark as follows: "Mr. SINGER has become a Master in the discovery of useful improvements. Hardly a week passes without the issue of one or more new patents for his inventions. His sewing Machines have been greatly improved within the past year, until now they are in the highest degree perfect. Thousands and millions have already taken large profits by the use of these Machines, and their business is rapidly increasing. We are glad of it. No one man has done so much towards the introduction of these great labor-saving machines as ISAAC M. SINGER. He ought to be well rewarded."

To such an extent have these Machines grown, that it is of nothing, except that our Machines are exhibited and sold at our offices in New-York, Boston, Newark, Louisville, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, and New-Orleans.

PENNSYLVANIA WRITS OF HABEAS CORPUS.

HEARING BEFORE JUDGE KANE.

From the Ledger.

On Monday morning, the 13th of August, the Hon. JOHN KINTZING KANE, Judge of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, delivered the following opinion in the case of JOHN H. WHEELER, petitioner, on a writ of habeas corpus:

The petition of JOHN H. WHEELER, a citizen of the State of Pennsylvania, was presented to me on the 11th day of July last, by his counsel, Mr. CHARLES GILPIN, and a rule was granted upon the Sheriff of the City and County of Philadelphia, to show cause why the writ should not issue. The Sheriff, by his attorney, Mr. WILLIAM MCMURTRIE, made return that the plaintiff was not in his custody, but was in the custody of the Sheriff of the City and County of Philadelphia, by virtue of a writ of habeas corpus issued by Judge KANE, of the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, and that the said JOHN H. WHEELER was then and there in his custody, in the prison of said City and County, by virtue of a writ of habeas corpus issued by Judge KANE, of the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, and that he had the said JOHN H. WHEELER in his custody, in the said prison, by virtue of the said last mentioned writ, and that he was ready to bring the said JOHN H. WHEELER before the said Judge, as he had been ordered to do, and he prayed to be dismissed from the premises. The Sheriff, by his attorney, also made return that the said JOHN H. WHEELER was in his custody, in the said prison

The Second Regatta at Glen Cove—Embarrassment.

FLUSHING, GLEN COVE, Saturday, July 28, 1855.

The announcement of the second Regatta drew a number of yacht men and admirers of that exciting sport to this house on Friday, and it was expected that a small steamer would have been here in New-York on the following day so as to arrive here in time for the start. From some cause or other no such enterprise was carried out, and the race was over before the arrival of the regular boat in the afternoon. This caused some little disappointment.

At a late hour on Friday, the crack schooner Twilight, owned by EDWIN A. JOHNSON, Esq., came to an anchor, having arrived with her owner from Newport. It was fully expected she would have been entered for the race, but owing to her superior size, about 70 tons, and other qualities, giving her too much superiority over the smaller craft, her owner gallantly declined to enter the lists.

A very fine schooner, the Wasp, owned by Mr. MONRIS, of Westchester, was also withdrawn from some misconception on the part of her owner as to the starting point agreed upon.

The Committee to whom the arrangements were entrusted was Commodore JOHNSON, CHARLES K. SELMAN and J. M. BALDWIN, Esqs. They held a meeting about 10 o'clock A. M., when the owners and masters of the squadron were assembled, and the usual amount of discussion and the expression of opinion as to the merits and demerits of their respective boats was had. It was settled that there should be two lists made out—one for a first-class and one for a second class of yachts. The prizes were silver cups—one to the first boat

The course agreed upon was from a point about half a mile above the Glen Cove landing to "the Throgs's Neck buoy," westward to "Throgs's Neck" and return to the buoy of "Matinnicock Point," which took to the flag-boat at Glen Cove.

The following boats were eventually agreed upon but the Wasp did not come to the signal, and only six were placed by the Judges as rounding the flag boat on the return.

FIRST CLASS.

Kateydid, Capt. THATCHER, 12½ tons.
Lilly Dale, Capt. CHAPMAN, — tons.
Ella, Capt. McKEON, 9 tons.
Lady Ellen, Capt. GUERNSEY, 6 tons.
Wasp, Capt. MONRIS, 14 tons.

SECOND CLASS.

Sam, Capt. MARTIN, 22 feet.
Pilot, Capt. WARREN, 24 feet.
Victoria, Capt. SHEAR, 22 feet.
White Pigeon, Capt. D. D. KERBY, 23 feet 5.
Madison, Capt. J. T. IRVING, 21 feet 6.
Water Witch, Capt. D. KIRBY, 22 feet 4.
Ada, Capt. HOYT, 18 feet 6.
Amy, Capt. NILLETT, 22 feet.

The hour of 11 was fixed upon for the yachts to be ready to obey the signal, but an hour's delay had to be endured by the ladies who had assembled on the little piazza fronting the "Cove;" but so bright and beautiful was the morning, so fresh and exhilarating the breeze, and so exciting the preparations, that no tedium was felt.

The scene indeed was surpassingly fair,—the smiling verdure of the opposite shores, the yachts dancing on the short chopping sea, just enough to make the connection delightful without the hazard of one's life. About 1 o'clock the little steamer DEW, Capt. BAIN, was announced to be ready for the Committee and a goodly party of ladies, children and gentlemen who had invitations to accompany them.

The start took place about a mile above the landing pier, and at 10:40 M. the signal was given. The start was a perfect picture. Away they went, in a cluster, as Lady Gay would say, but it was not so, with her in simple phrasing, "the fools first, as usual," for in this kind of racing the one which makes a good offing stands a fair chance of getting around ahead of her competitors. In this instance the Katydid and the Ella went off nearly ahead, closely attended by the smaller craft, one or two of them having meeting with slight accidents which threw their crews into a little confusion.

The Ella, shortly after she had made her first tack, carried away her throat halliards block fastenings, and was compelled to haul out of the course to repair damages. The Wasp, although she did not get away with the fleet, yet her owner seemed inclined to show what she could do, for she came up with them when off Stark's Point, and kept ahead of the Katydid and the Ella, rounding the buoy at the Steppingstones a few lengths ahead of the Katydid, and then ran to leeward, so as not to interfere with the others, six of them coming round the buoy in the following close order, sailing on the wind, which was what sailors call a tenoil breeze from northwest:

Time of Rounding the Buoy at "Steppingstone Stones."

	h.	m.	s.		h.	m.	s.
Lilly Dale	2	15	15	Lilly Dale	2	25	30
Ella	2	20	10	White Pigeon	2	26	20
Victoria	2	22	45	Sam	2	27	—

This was the most interesting point of the race, for the boats hardly changed their positions until they rounded the other buoy to the eastward of the Round, a distance of about ten miles, and the Committee determined upon only taking the time of the leading boat, the Katydid, which went round beautifully at 3 h. 27 m. 10 sec. She then got before the wind and breasted her awning for a square sail forward, and the others had no chance of overtaking her. On the steamboat nearing the point of departure it was found that the flag-boat had drifted a few yards up the Cove, and the Committee then determined, in order to spare any cavilling, to time the boats at what they supposed to be the starting point, and also when they rounded the flag-boat, and the following was the result:

FIRST CLASS.

	Flag-boat of Beneath.			At Flag-boat.
	h.	m.	s.	h.	m.	s.
Katydid	4	4	10	4	5	12
Ella	4	17	5	4	15	24
Lilly Dale	4	20	3	4	20	32

SECOND CLASS.

Victoria	4	24	5	4	27	50
White Pigeon	4	29	55	4	31	32
Sam	4	31	9	4	32	22

The usual complimentary cheers were given to the crews of the winners, and all hands invited ashore to the Pavilion. Here a new variation of the spirit of yachting was exhibited. All the ladies, and, of course, all the gentlemen, sailors as well as landsmen, assembled on the piazza in front of the Pavilion and OLIS ORMSBY, the landlord, produced the silver cups, which were handed to Commodore JOHNSON, of the Twilight, who addressed Capt. THATCHER, the owner of the Katydid, complimenting him on his success on the present occasion, as it afforded him (Mr. JOHNSON) great pleasure in being honored as the presenter of the prizes to the winners. He (he thought the Katydid had behaved nobly and deserved all the honor of the occasion. He then alluded in most flattering terms to the fact of the Katydid behaving so well at the former regatta at this place, when she missed taking the prize more from an adherence to technical rules than want of skill or lack of superior sailing qualities. He offered his congratulations to the owner and crew, and hoped they would reap more honors on future occasions. He would remind the company that American yachts and Yankee sailors [cheers from the ladies] had left Englishmen and all others far behind—gone to windward. To the ladies of Glen Cove the yatch-men were much indebted for the interest they—the ladies—manifested in nautical affairs—both this and the present year, and spoke in the highest terms of the hospitality of the residents of Glen Cove, particularly their host, Mr. ORMSBY, whose roof they were under.

Capt. THATCHER made a brief reply, saying that he thanked the Committee and the Company for the cup, and would keep the cup he held in his hand on his hearth-loom and as a proud memento of the speed of his little Katydid. He yet hoped to win a prize worthy for the builder as well as those who sailed her on the race just concluded.

The second cup was then presented with due honors to Mr. D. D. KIRBY, the builder and owner of the Victoria, and the party then separated, the gentlemen to get their supper and the ladies to dress for "the hop" and other Summer evening watering place enjoyments.

The next regatta is for the Harlem Boat Club exclusively; and if the present brilliant weather continues, it will doubtless prove quite as entertaining an affair as the one described by DELTA.

The annual session of the Grand Lodge of the United States will be held at Baltimore on Monday, Sept. 17, prox. The New-York representatives will be JOHN G. CLAYTON and ANDREW FOREMAN from the Grand Lodge, and JOHN A. KENNEDY from the Grand Encampment.

Rev. Dr. COHEN is slowly recovering from his paralytic indisposition.

NEW-YORK CITY.

City Politics.

The approaching Fall Election in this City promises to be one of the most interesting and complicated that has ever taken place. Never before were there so many candidates, "regular" and "independent," in the field for City and County Offices.

THE WORKINGMEN.

[A body of persons calling themselves the "Workingmen's Committee" had a meeting at the Westchester House on Friday night, and adopted a platform—a very long one—which premises that our City, State and Union are in a lamentable condition; declares that workingmen should be no longer tools of politicians; that the Primary Elections in this City are corrupt; that true Americans are those who make this country their home, wherever born; that they will oppose all political action calculated to weaken the union of the States; that the contract system is a great evil, and ought to be abolished; that the connection between the banks and the State ought to cease; that the Prohibitory Law trenches on private rights and violates the Constitution; that the defrauding of the workingman of his wages should be made a crime; that the City Charter should be amended; that the Corporation lots should be improved by the building of dwellings, rented at a moderate cost, so that the poor would be protected against increase of rents; and that the Association will support none for office but such as favor these principles.

The only nomination made by the committee during the evening was that of GEORGE SHEA, Esq., for Police Justice, in place of Justice PEARCY.

THE KNOW NOTHING.

The Know-Nothing (Hindoo) City and County Conventions will meet this evening to choose candidates for the Fall election. It is a rule of the Order to hold a separate convention for the nomination of each candidate.

The conventions will immediately, after their adjournment, report their doings, for approval, to a mass meeting at Palace Hall, corner of Broadway and Walker street. None but members of the order will be admitted to this mass meeting.

The K. V. Senatorial Conventions will meet in their several districts next Wednesday.

City Mortality.

The City Inspector reports 663 deaths in the City last week, viz.: 78 men, 56 women, 270 boys and 220 girls—an increase of 41 on the mortality of the previous week. As usual, more than half the deaths arose from diseases of the stomach, bowels and other digestive organs. Seventeen cases of hooping cough, 10 of scarlet fever, seven of measles, 43 of consumption, eight of disease of the heart, and one of cholera, are reported. Of the whole number of deaths but 46 occurred in the public institutions—an unusually small number. The nativity table gives 519 natives of the United States, 66 of Ireland, 30 of Germany, eight of England, and the balance of various European countries.

The Kingston Encampment.

The Military Encampment of the Second Division commences at Kingston to-day. Of course a large number of our citizens will desire to visit the tented field. The cars of the Hudson River Railroad, which leave Chambers-street at 6 and 9 o'clock A. M., at 12 M., and 5 o'clock P. M., will take visitors to Rhinebeck, thence by ferry they reach Rondout, the landing of the Encampment. They can return by the same route at 6:26 and 10:23 A. M., and at 1:18 and 6:38 P. M.

Camp Meeting.

The annual camp meeting at Sing Sing opens to-day, and closes next Saturday. The Hudson River Railroad cars leave their lower depôt at almost all hours of the day. The express trains leave here at 9 A. M., 12 M., and 4 and 5 P. M. Getting back is just as easy a matter.

More Aid for the Sufferers.

We understand that a further sum of $2,000 was sent on Saturday by the recent Corn Exchange Meeting's Distributing Committee to Norfolk, for the benefit of the sufferers from yellow fever in those districts.

☞ Boys look out for the sharks when you are bathing at the bulkheads about the City. The Police ought to nab you for violating the ordinance, but the sharks, which just now are abundant, without any writ of habeas corpus, delight to seize, to have, and to hold a boy's body.

☞ Several gentlemen are advertising their willingness to serve the City as Coroners, Sheriffs, &c. Others are announced by advertisement over the names of their friends. That's the way to do it, and in this way it will be easy to let the people know who is "up" and who ought to "go in," or be left out.

☞ Rev. HORACE T. LOVE, of Boston, Corresponding Secretary of the American and Foreign Bible Society, preached an interesting sermon at the Tabernacle Baptist Church, in Second-avenue, last evening, on the parable of the Prodigal Son.

Fires.

FIRE IN BROADWAY.

A fire broke out at 1½ o'clock Sunday afternoon, in the cockloft of building No. 160 Broadway, used as a place for storage by Messrs. HASBROOK, LYNES & CASE, dealers in fancy goods, who occupied the third and fourth floors. The flames were soon discovered, and speedily extinguished, but owing to the nature of their goods, Messrs. HASBROOK, LYNES & CASE sustained considerable damage, but could not state the exact amount. They are insured for $20,000—$3,000 each in the Exchange, Mercantile, Washington and Atlantic Insurance offices. Messrs SMYTH, O'ROURKE & HENRY, fancy dry goods dealers, the occupants of the second floor, and Messrs. HALT & JOCELYN, who occupied the first floor, sustained some damage by water. Both firms are fully insured. The origin of the fire is not known.

FIRE IN ELIZABETH-STREET.

At about 9½ o'clock Sunday evening a fire broke out in the upper story of a small frame building occupied by a Mr. HOPPER as a shoe shop, and by Mr. GEO. W. LOCKWOOD, as a tailor shop and a dwelling. The entire damage will not exceed $200. Neither of the tenants are insured. The damage to the building, which is owned by Messrs. GOODRICH and NAPP, is covered by insurance. The origin of the fire has not been ascertained.

FIRE IN EAST BROADWAY.

A fire broke out about 10 o'clock Saturday night among some straw and other rubbish in the cellar of building No. 48 East Broadway, occupied by a Mrs. OSTRANDER, manufacturer of beer and other beverages. It was speedily extinguished, after having caused but a trifling damage.

The Prohibitory Law.

Yesterday was a busy day at the various Police Courts, where the disposition of drunkards formed the great feature of the day's labor. On Saturday and Sunday, the number of applicants for a place in the drunkard's directory far exceeded the number which have ordinarily been brought up. The following is the summary for the respective days:

SATURDAY.

Essex Market, before Justice Brennan	15
Fourth District, before Justice Pearcy	2
Total	35

SUNDAY.

Tombs, before Justice Osborne	13

Police News.

A PICKPOCKET ARRESTED.

James Smith was arrested on Friday by officer Chastney of the First District Police, charged with having taken a gold watch of the value of $45 dollars, the property of Wm. Kirk, of No. 188 Bleecker-street. It is alleged that while complainant was on his way from Grand Island to this city, on the ferry boat, he felt the prisoner lifting the watch from the pocket of his vest. The prisoner, finding himself spotted, endeavored to escape by mixing with the crowd, but he was closely followed by Kirk, when he let the watch fall upon the deck. Kirk however seized the man and held him until the arrival of the boat at her dock, when he gave him into the custody of an officer, who conveyed the thief to the Tombs, where Aid'erman BAIRD, after examination, committed him in full to take his trial.

ALLEGED FORGERY.

Policeman BEAN, of the Third district, on Friday made arrest of George W. Mason, charged with having forged the names of Charles H. Woodruff and William E. Hofield to three orders for goods drawn on S. S. Schenck. The orders are respectively dated the 7th, 9th, and 15th August, and are as follows:

MR. S. S. SCHENCK.—Sir: Please to deliver to the bearer 20 feet of 4 inch belting; 40 do do 3 inch do; and charge the same to CHARLES H. WOODRUFF.
By WILLIAM E. HAUFIELD.

SING SING, Aug. 7 1855.

The complainant in the case is Mr. Schenck, who alleges that the orders were forged by Mason with intent to defraud. Committed for examination by Aid. BAIRD.

FRAUDULENT MEASURES.

A pedler hailing from Old England was, on Friday hauled up before Justice DAVISON of the Second District Police Court, charged with using fraudulent measures. The fellow, who gave the name of Thomas Cawley, was retailing peaches from measures about one half of which were filled up, as is alleged, by a false bottom of wood. He was held for examination. Policeman Rogers of the Eighth Police District made the arrest.

Destructive Fire.

About 10 o'clock Saturday evening, a fire broke out in the stove manufactory and foundry of LOYTUS WEURS, situated at the foot of South Sixth-street. The building consisted of sheds and wooden buildings; also, a brick building, occupied partly as a store and dwelling house, which were totally destroyed. The fire spread with great rapidity and resulted in the complete destruction of the premises. The wooden buildings were occupied as a foundry and manufactory of stoves, the brick building as a warehouse and dwelling house, occupied by WILLIAM O'NEIL, JAMES CRAIG, HUGH MCELROY, JOHN HUSTIN and GEORGE O'DONNELL. The fire is supposed to have originated in the foundry—by what means, however, is unknown. Loss about $10,000, supposed to be fully insured.

During the conflagration it was rumored that a man by the name of O'DONNELL was in the burning building. A ladder was raised, and Captain LUISCHARD and officer ARMSTRONG, of the Fifth District Police, attempted to enter the building by means of the ladder, but were deterred by the intense heat and smoke. It was afterwards found that the rumor was untrue.

A party of boys and hangers-on of engines had assembled in NEVILLE'S King's County Hotel during the fire, and were regaling themselves with the bountiful supply spread for the comfort of the firemen, until all was exhausted, when finding they could not get more they began to destroy the furniture. They were deterred by the Police from committing further depredations.

By this fire not only are a number of men thrown out of employment, but a great number of families rendered houseless, which, in the first instance, is much to be deplored, as it is the intention of the proprietors, we learn, not to rebuild the factory.

Brooklyn Mortality.

One hundred and twenty-five deaths were reported to the Health Officer last week, from the following

DISEASES.—Casualty, erysipelas, bilious fever, nervous fever, inflammation of the bowels, measles, ulcers of intestines, 1 each; congestion of the brain, 2; dropsy in the head, whooping cough, inflammation of the brain, inflammation of the liver, inflammation of the lungs, teething, 3 each; debility, premature birth, sprue, stillborn, 4 each; consumption, dysentery, 5 each; convulsions, croup, scarlet fever, 6 each; diarrhœa, 8; marasmus, 14; cholera infantum, 21. Males, 75; females, 50; adults, 18; minors, 107—total, 125.

Ingratitude.

On Saturday last two little girls who had been kindly provided with a home in the Cumberland street Orphan Asylum, East Brooklyn, left the premises in a clandestine manner, taking with them a bundle of clothing not their own. A police officer arrested them upon suspicion of having stolen the clothing soon after they left the house, and brought them before Justice CURTIS for examination. Through the intercession of their benefactors, whom they had wronged, they were discharged from custody, and again taken to the institution. Their one day's experience in crime, as it has resulted, may be of vast benefit to them.

Sudden Death of a Brewer.

On Saturday, Coroner HANFORD of Brooklyn, was called to hold an inquest upon the body of a German, named LEONHARD VETTER, formerly in the employ of JOHN SCHEMMER, brewer, corner of Scheim and Smith streets, Eastern District, who died suddenly the night previous. The day previous to his death, he was in one of the vaults of the brewery until 10 o'clock when he came out to replenish the fire under the furnace, and while doing this, was taken ill and died the same evening, as above stated. Verdict—Death from Apoplexy.

Remarkable Escape.

A son of Mr. BULGER, residing at No. 120 Columbia-street, Brooklyn, a few days since fell from a third-story window on to an iron grating in the area below. The boy, who is only two years and-a-half old, when taken up was insensible, but by application of the proper restoratives, he was soon restored to consciousness, and it appears he sustained no serious injury—not even a bone was broken. The fall was about thirty feet, and how the child escaped instant death appears miraculous.

Information Wanted.

Information is wanted of the "Martyrs' Monument Association," organized in Brooklyn a few months ago. It commenced operations with a grand flourish of trumpets and large promises to the public. The "bones of the martyrs" still remain under the "old shed" on Hudson-avenue. Are all these promises to be broken?

☞ A special meeting of the Brooklyn Common Council has been called for this evening, when some action will be had relative to the conduct of Engine Company No. 4, while going to a fire in Gowanus, a few days since. The Mayor on Saturday accused Engines Nos. 3 and 4 to be locked up. What No. 9 is locked up for has not been made public.

☞ For the forty-eight hours ending yesterday morning the police of Brooklyn made twenty-three arrests for intoxication.

Killed on a Railroad.

Another instance of the danger of persons standing or walking upon the tracks of Railroads, occurred at Middletown, Orange Co., on Thursday last. A resident of that place named WALTER MILLS, about sixty years of age, was standing or walking upon one of the tracks of the New-York and Erie Railroad, reading a newspaper busily, when a train came along, and he stepped on the other track. The mail train was approaching upon that track, unperceived by him, and he seemed not to hear either the whistle of the locomotive or the shouts of the Engineer. The bumper of the locomotive struck him in his side, and injured him so that he soon afterwards died.

A Central Point.

On Friday afternoon, at 7 o'clock, we met at East Bloomfield Railway station, in Ontario County, N. Y., travelers who left New-York, Philadelphia and Detroit that morning at 6 o'clock—thus reaching this place, eight miles west of Canandaigua, at the same moment, by the regular Express trains, viâ the Great Western and Niagara Falls Railroad from Detroit; by the New-York and Erie from New-York, and by the Williamsport and Catawissa Railroad from Philadelphia into Elmira—making this point just thirteen hours from each of these cities. R. G. P.

☞ The British brig Ada, Captain GANDY, from St. Thomas on the 1st instant, arrived on Saturday evening with the bodies of Mr. JOHN VAIL of Weymouth, who died July 29, and Miss SMITH of New-York. On the 12th inst., in lat. 33°, lon. 71° 30', the Ada spoke the British schooner Chieftain, for Halifax from Inagua. The captain and mate were both dead, and two seamen were sick. The men wanted a navigator, which the crew of the Ada were unable to supply them with.

Dreadful Disaster on the Lake—Ten Men Drowned.

From the Milwaukee Sentinel, Aug. 16.

By the propeller Milwaukee, Capt. HOWARD, we have the following account from Mr. SLYFIELD, Keeper of the South Manitou Light, of the wreck of the bark Hubby and loss of ten lives:

SOUTH MANITOU, Sunday, Aug. 12.

The bark L. M. Hubby left Chicago Aug. 5, having on board 80 tons of sand as ballast. She had reached within about 30 miles of this point, and near Point Betsy, running under main staysail and jib, when about 4 A. M., of the 8th, she capsized. She was 30 minutes sinking. The captain and mate and two men got into the small boat, leaving the remainder of the men hanging and lying in the water. The sea was so high that the boat could not pick up any of the men, and it pushed for shore. Before reaching land the boat capsized and the captain and one man were drowned. The others, righting the boat, got near shore at the Sleeping Bear, nearly opposite here, when the boat capsized again, and another man was drowned. The mate, being left alone, got ashore and climbed up the steep bank. There he remained three days without food, but finally managed to reach a little settlement in Bear Bay, where he was cared for. The people gave him money and clothes, and he is now able to be about, but very weak. The names of the lost are Capt. ROBERTS, DANIEL GRANT, HENRY DAY, (colored,) the rest unknown.

The information is given by JAMES COTTERELL, the only survivor of the eleven persons on the vessel. A. D. SLYFIELD, Light-House Keeper, South Manitou Island.

A grand Mass was performed in the Church of the Nativity, Second-avenue yesterday, on which occasion Signor BADIALI assisted in the choir. The same choir also sang at vespers at 7 o'clock. This is said to be the last time Signor BADIALI will sing in America.

MARRIED.

In this City, on Friday, Aug. 17, by Rev. ABEL CAMP, Mr. PETER J. MCKESSOCK to Miss HANNAH GRANIGAN, all of this City.

In this City, on Thursday, Aug. 16, by Rev. Dr. HAWKS, at Calvary Church, PATRICK A. JANON, of West Point, to Mrs. MARY D. PORTERFIELD, daughter of the late Dr. FIGURES, of Nashville, Tenn.

DIED.

At Bridgeport, early on Saturday morning, Aug. 18, Mrs. BETSEY WOOD, wife of David Wood, Esq., of this City, in the 60th year of her age.

MONDAY, Aug. 20—A. M.

There was not much activity, but there was a little more firmness apparent in the Stock market on Saturday. The demand continued fair for all good dividend-paying Securities; and as these were not freely offered they commanded pretty strong and buoyant prices. Another lot of $2,000 U. S. Coupon sixes, of 1868, changed hands during the early session of the Board of Brokers at 117½. In State Stocks the operations were restricted, but the market was rather poorly supplied with them, and former quotations were well supported. There was also some inactivity in Railway Bonds. Illinois Central Bonds were the liveliest, opening at 97½ and closing at 97½. $6,000 of the Freeland Bonds of the same Company brought 92½. New-York Central scrows were quiet, at 104. The business in the Bonds of the Erie Road was also limited, but at steady prices; sales were made of $5,000 Hudson River First Mortgages, at 102; $1,000 do. Second Mortgage, at 93; $5,000 Michigan Central 8 ⅌ cent Bonds, at 104; and $1,000 Chicago and Rock Island Bonds at 97½. A more general movement occurred in Railway shares. New-York Central shares were in request and firm. A livelier business was transacted in Erie shares, opening at 83, and closing at 83½, b60. It is now generally conceded that there is a chance for a satisfactory arrangement of the difficulties between the New-York Central and Erie Roads, through the intervention of mutual friends. It is to be hoped so very desirable an arrangement may be speedily effected. The present sharp rivalry between both Companies is detrimental to each; and the sooner they give it up the better. Reading shares are in good request and are steadily approximating par value. The latest quotation on Saturday was 99, s3. Michigan Central shares were sold to a moderate extent at the early meeting of the Board, and left off at 102½, b60. In other Securities the operations were light, but there was considerable firmness recognizable. The market closed encouragingly.

The Foreign trade of the port, for the week just closed, presents a favorable comparison with that for the same week last August. The total imports of Dry Goods and general Merchandise during the week were $3,737,786, against $4,062,603 the corresponding week in 1854. For the Calendar year to the present date, the total import is $93,095,000, against $123,797,000 to same date last year. The export of Domestic Produce and Miscellaneous Goods during the week reached $1,276,570, against $1,161,560 the corresponding week in 1854. For the Calendar year to the present date, the total export, exclusive of specie, amounts to $37,385,000, against $42,562,000 to same date last year. The export of specie for the week, as registered at the New-York Custom-House, was but $22,500. In this small sum, no portion is included of the amount (over half a million dollars) transmitted to Boston on last Tuesday evening, for Wednesday's outward-bound packet. The direct export of specie hence same week last August was $979,204. For the Calendar year to the present date, the specie export from New-York is $20,604,000, against $32,340,000 to same date in 1854. There were no California gold deliveries during the week, or the corresponding week last year. For the Calendar year to the present date, the total receipts of California gold at this port by manifest amount to $22,554,393, against $31,086,471 to same period in 1854. The regular Sub-Treasury balance on Saturday afternoon was $3,957,459, against $3,645,271 at the close of the previous week. Saturday's receipts amounted to $341,323, and payments to but $53,051. The payments for Assay Office reached $132,526; on Disbursing Checks, $82,811; and the balance in the hands of the Assistant Treasurer, to the credit of all accounts, was $8,086,223. The Money market on Saturday presented no new features. The supply of Capital continued greatly in excess of the demand for it, and loan and discount rates ruled very low and easy. There was no business of importance transacted in foreign Exchanges. The nominal quotations were for Sterling Bills, 109½@110; for Bills on Paris, f.5.12½.

The variations in the general Markets during the week were rather slight. Cotton ruled quiet, and closed ⅛c.@¼c. ⅌ lb. lower than the previous Saturday. The supply was moderate, but there was a lack of confidence among holders. Flour came forward slowly; and, having been freely inquired for, desirable grades advanced 25c.@50c. ⅌ barrel. Wheat continued scarce, and though not in brisk request, it rose 5c.@10c. ⅌ bushel, closing, however, tamely and feebly, with more offering. Western mixed Corn fluctuated considerably during the week, but was in fair supply and moderate demand towards the close, when it stood from 1c.@2c. ⅌ bushel higher than the preceding Saturday. Not much was in market of any other kind. In Groceries the general business has been animated at buoyant prices. Provisions were more sought after, and were increasing in value. Other commodities ruled about the same. The following is a comparative statement of the export of the principal articles of domestic produce for the week, and for the corresponding week of last year:

	1854. Quantity.	1854. Value.	1855. Quantity.	1855. Value.
